Whereas there is now under construction a great national highway leading from New York to Seattle and to San Francisco, which is being built as a memorial to Gen. Washington; and

Whereas many hundreds of miles of this highway have already been constructed at a cost of millions of dollars to the people of the localities through which it passes; and

Whereas a point on the Missouri River at the site of old Fort Randall, in the State of South Dakota, has been selected by the engineers in charge of this great enterprise as the most feasible point for crossing the Missouri River by this national highway: Therefore

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, earnestly petitioned to appropriate the necessary funds and to cause the construction of a suitable bridge across the Missouri River upon the line of the said Washington Memorial Highway at said Fort Randall, in the State of South Dakota.

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby instructed to send copies of this concurrent resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives representing the State of South Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. STERLING presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of South Dakota, ss:

I, Frank M. Rood, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed, to wit, senate joint resolution No. 1 and house joint resolution No. 18, were duly passed by the 1915 session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, approved by the governor, and that the same are now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, this 5th day of March, 1915.

[SEAL.]

FRANK M. ROOD,
Secretary of State.

A joint resolution (senate, No. 1) memoralizing Congress to take action looking to the comprehensive control and development of all streams.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in view of the vast annual destruction of life and property from floods, the menace due to the universal subsidence of ground waters, the rapid exhaustion of our coal measures and timber supplies, the extension of the use of electricity in commerce and domestic use, and for the general welfare, the Congress of the United States is respectfully petitioned to enact legislation authorizing the President to proceed at once to the control of all streams of the United States for the prevention of floods, the conservation of the ground waters, and the development of the water powers upon such streams, as well as the use of such streams for the irrigation of arid lands, upon such terms as will permit owners of lands benefited to ultimately repay the cost of such benefits.

House joint resolution 18.

A joint resolution memoralizing Congress to make appropriations for the improvement of navigation upon the upper Missouri River.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of South Dakota (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memoralized and petitioned to provide that out of the moneys appropriated in the future by Congress for the improvement of navigation upon the Missouri River above the mouth of the Big Sioux River such part be expended as may be necessary to cut through the necks of land formed by bends in said river in central South Dakota, and known, commonly and geographically, as Big Bend and Little Bend, respectively, and thus cut off some 26 miles of unnecessary boat travel at Big Bend and some 19 miles of unnecessary boat travel at Little Bend, and thereby make it feasible through such work to develop hydroelectric power plants at such places either through State or private enterprise.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Globe, Ariz., together with an estimate of engineers relative to the construction of a connecting roadway between the two Government bridges on the San Carlos Indian Reservation over the Gila and San Carlos Rivers in the State of Arizona. I ask that the memorial and accompanying letter addressed to my colleague and myself may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying memorial were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GLOBE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE (INC.),
Globe, Ariz., February 11, 1915.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, MARCUS A. SMITH, and CARL HAYDEN,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: To me has been delegated by the Chamber of Commerce of Globe and a committee of citizens of Gila and Graham Counties the duty of placing before you reasons why Congress should make an appropriation of $40,000 for the construction of a connecting road between the two Government bridges on the San Carlos Indian Reservation, in this State, over the Gila and San Carlos Rivers.

I would call your attention to the fact that the bridges are now absolutely useless to the Indians for whose benefit they were constructed, for the reason that there is no road between them, no approaches have been constructed, nor have the two short pieces of road been constructed necessary to connect them with the main road across the reservation, and would ask that you cause the Indian appropriation bill to carry a sum sufficient for this purpose.

This body and the citizens of Gila and Graham Counties caused Mr. Julius Milton, one of the most capable engineers in the State, to survey this road and work and make estimates of the cost. Inclosed I hand you copy of his report showing cost, and under separate cover am forwarding you map and profile showing in detail what is necessary to complete this work.

In order that the Indians or the public may derive any benefit from the bridges it is absolutely necessary that this be done. As they now stand they are a total loss to the Government, Indians, and the public.

Without these bridges being placed in commission it is impossible for the Indians to ford the Gila and San Carlos Rivers during a number of months of each year, owing to quicksand and high water.

There are large tracts of land on the reservation, susceptible of irrigation and cultivation, which could be utilized by the Indians if these bridges could be used, and the Indians would cultivate them and become practically self-sustaining. One tract alone is estimated to contain about 4,000 acres. (See Mr. Charles's report advising the construction of the bridges.) The Indians have attempted to irrigate and cultivate these lands at a great loss to themselves and the Government because of the fact that they had to be abandoned and became an absolute loss, as the crops matured when the rivers were not fordable. If these pieces of road—less than 11 miles in length—and the approaches are built, so that the bridges can be used, the Indians will be able to irrigate and cultivate these lands, raise crops thereon, be in direct communication with the agency, and be in a position to market their crops and to have their grain ground at the mill located at the agency at San Carlos.

Placing these bridges in use will put the Indian agent in closer touch with the Indians than heretofore, enable him to control them more successfully, give them the benefit of school facilities, teach them habits of industry, bring them under civilizing influences, and thus make them self-sustaining.

The reservation contains vast areas of timberland upon which is a large amount of matured timber. If these bridges were made available, the matured timber would be more accessible, making it easier for the department to market the matured timber now ready for use. This matured timber will not increase in value because of future growth and it will be a benefit to the growing timber upon the reservation to remove the matured timber and market it, thus creating a large fund for the benefit of this tribe of Indians.

The bridges will also make the portion of the reservation containing the timber areas accessible in case of forest fires and place the Government, the Indians, and the community here in a position where they can properly protect the forest from fire.

Owing to the fact that these rivers can not be forded at times, the agency has been compelled in some instances to ship in its firewood by rail from a considerable distance. If these bridges were in use, the Indians would cut and haul, by their own labor, all firewood used at the agency, thus giving employment to a considerable number of Indians for several months each year. This is also true with respect to driving beef cattle to the agency and the obtaining of many supplies used at the agency.

It would place the Federal authorities in a position to properly manage and control the Indians in case of disturbances.

They would become of great benefit to the United States Government in the transportation of United States troops to and from the various forts in Arizona and particularly in case of serious outbreak on the Indian reservation.

At this point it is about 56 miles across the reservation and the bridges are situate just about midway between the boundaries.

Practically all of this road is in Graham County, and it is unable to stand the burden of constructing this piece of road, and Gila County can not expend money for this purpose outside its boundaries.

The State is expending large sums of money in the construction of roads and bridges and building up a great highway system, of which this road should become a part. In so doing the State is making the land on the reservation valuable, creating markets for the timber, mineral wealth, and other products of the reservation, and doing her part in the civilizing of the Indians, and it seems to us that the Indians and the Government should do their part, at least to the extent of building this small piece of road to make available two bridges they have already built. Citizens of the State grazing cattle on this reservation pay as a grazing tax into the Indian fund for these Indians an amount two or three times greater each year than the sum necessary to construct this piece of road.

A greater portion of this appropriation would go direct to the Indians as wages, as nearly all of the labor would be performed by the Indians.

These bridges would be of great benefit to the State of Arizona and to the counties of Gila and Graham in placing the mining district of Globe and Miami, having a population of 15,000 to 18,000 in direct connection by wagon road with the large farming community along the Gila River, in Graham County—the reservation lying between these two communities—thus affording the farmers in Graham County an opportunity to market their products in the mining camps at Globe and vicinity, and will give the Indians an additional market for their crops.

This piece of road will be a part of one of the popular transcontinental automobile routes, which will pass by the Roosevelt Dam and along the scenic highway between Roosevelt and Mesa, which it is proposed be established as a Government park or monument.

In every way this is one of the most desirable pieces of work the Government could construct.

It is hoped you will give this matter your immediate attention and have the appropriation made at this session of Congress.

Sincerely, yours,

J. J. KEEGAN.

GLOBE, ARIZ., December 29, 1914.

To whom it may concern:

Will herewith present my report as the engineer of location survey of a wagon road between San Carlos River road bridge and the bridge over Gila River within San Carlos Indian Reservation in Graham County, State of Arizona:

Line commences at a point on the San Carlos to Globe highway south of San Carlos River bridge. After crossing this bridge it traverses over the broken high mesa north of the river to the watershed between San Carlos and Gila River drainages; thence southeasterly along the old Indian trail to and up the north side of Gila River to the bridge and thence south to the San Corlos to Bowie wagon road. In elevation it is located at all points above high-water line in the reservoir of proposed San Carlos irrigation project.

Total length of line is 10.70 miles.

Maximum grade is 10 per cent.

MATERIALS.

With the exception of the ascend from San Carlos River bottom to the mesa, which material is limerock, and the descent from low mesa to Gila River bridge, which material is conglomerate rock, the material along the line is a sandy clay and loam. The drainage channels contain sand and gravel.

SIXTEEN-FOOT ROADBED.

As this proposed wagon road in time will be part of Arizona State highway system, I will suggest and recommend that a 16-foot roadbed will be decided on, and it is on such roadbed that I have based the cost estimate of construction.

DRAINAGE.

Along the easterly portion of the line, between mileposts 7 and 8, the water from the numerous side drainages, when it strikes the higher portion of Gila River bottom land has a tendency to spread out over the ground surface and does not cut or keep to any definite channel. This will necessitate excavation of channels and wing ditches to concentrate the water to drainage openings.

With exception at times of rainstorms a roadbed on this portion of the line laid close to ground surface will be sufficient and the bridge structures at stake 318, Triplet Wash, and at stakes 389 and 399 to be eliminated and substituted by surface crossings. A saving of $7,000 will therewith be made.

The drainage structures are of following design:

Concrete slab deck bridges with 15-foot spans.

Concrete reinforced box culverts.

Ingot iron-pipe culverts.

Cost estimate.

Grading—Total embankment, 43,200 yards:
Rock excavation, 1,400 yards, at $1.50	$2,100
Earth excavation, 3,000 yards, at 25 cents	750
Earth borrow, 38,800 yards, at 25 cents	9,700
Surface ditches, 300 yards, at 25 cents	75
Channel changes, 800 yards, at 25 cents	200
		$12,825
Drainage structures.
15 concrete slab deck bridges	19,544
12 concrete culverts	1,478
36 ingot iron culvert pipes	2,097
		23,119
Brush cutting		250
Four months engineering and superintendent		1,200
		37,394

By eliminating bridge structures at stakes 318, 389, and 399, substituting same by surface crossing, the total cost of construction will be $30,394.

Respectfully submitted.

JULIUS MILTON.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President and the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, in session convened respectfully represent that—

Whereas that portion of the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation, in the State of Arizona, lying south of the Salt or Black River contains an area far in excess of that necessary to sustain and maintain the Indians residing and maintained thereon; and

Whereas according to the United States census of 1910 there are only 1,860 Indians residing and being maintained on that portion of said reservation south of the said Salt or Black River; and

Whereas the present area of said reservation south of said Salt or Black River is more than 1,500,000 acres; and

Whereas the area of said reservation, if reduced to the boundaries hereinafter set forth, will be between 600,000 and 700,000 acres; and

Whereas all of the farming lands within said reservation, viz, those lying along the Gila and San Carlos Rivers, will remain within the hereinafter described boundaries and are sufficient to maintain several times the number of Indians now on said reservation; and

Whereas the Government sawmill operated for the benefit of these Indians, together with nearly all of the merchantable timber on said reservation, will be within the boundaries of such reservation if established in accordance with this memorial; and

Whereas that portion of said reservation asked to be thrown open is of no utility to said Indians, except for grazing purposes, and these Indians have a very limited number of cattle and horses, and such reservation after being reduced will contain a far greater acreage of grazing lands than these Indians can ever utilize; and

Whereas that portion of said reservation which would be thrown open contains many valuable mineral deposits and large areas of grazing lands, which would at once be occupied by American settlers and miners, and will maintain a large number of people, who will be able to improve and develop this vast area and give employment to both the white man and the Indian: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Arizona, That we call upon the President or the Congress of the United States to take such action as may be necessary to reduce the boundaries of said White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation to the area hereinafter described and to throw open to settlement and mining location all that portion of said reservation lying south of Salt or Black River and outside of the following described boundaries, to wit:

Commencing at a point on the east boundary line of the White Mountain or San Carlos Indian Reservation 2 miles south of the Gila River, near Geronimo; thence westerly on a line south of and 2 miles distant from the said Gila River to a point 2 miles south and 2 miles west of the San Carlos Agency; thence northerly on a line west of and 2 miles distant from the said San Carlos River to a point 2 miles west and 2 miles north of the Talkali or Rice Indian School; thence northerly to a point 2 miles west and 2 miles north of the Government sawmill, on said reservation; thence east to the one hundred and tenth meridian west longitude; thence southwesterly to a point in the top of the Gila Mountain Range at the acute angle in the east boundary line of said reservation due north from the place of beginning; thence south to the place of beginning; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress, the Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, and the Hon. CARL HAYDEN.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represents that the several Indian reservations in the State of Arizona now embrace large areas of mineral land, which under present regulations are not open to location as mineral claims and are valueless as tillable or agricultural land; and

Whereas the opening of these mineral lands in these aforesaid reservations to entry as mineral claims by prospectors, miners, and legitimate mining companies will hasten the development of the State and at the same time give employment to the Indians on big reservations in road building and other departments of work and make them more self-supporting; and

Whereas the opening of these claims to mining will develop water in many heretofore arid portions of the State and improve the value of said lands for grazing, to which they are now allotted: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Arizona, That the Congress of the United States is hereby petitioned and urged to enact such legislation as may be necessary to open to entry and location the mineral lands embraced within the confines of these aforesaid Indian reservations by bona fide prospectors and miners, subject to the same regulations governing mineral lands on other public domain: Provided, however, That this petition shall not be so construed as to permit any person, company, or corporation to enter in or upon large tracts of land in these reservations for any purpose other than mining, as hereinbefore stated: And provided further, That no land other than mineral lands, as defined in the mineral laws of the United States pertaining thereto, shall be included within the provisions of this petition: And be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and the Representatives of Arizona in Congress; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, in session convened, respectfully represents—

Whereas the boundary line dividing the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico is marked by monuments placed several miles apart, with no barrier or other distinguishing mark indicating said line; and

Whereas the natural lines of travel and stock drifts run back and forward across said line; and

Whereas detachments of the various warring factions and guerilla bands of Mexico often invade American territory, and professional thieves and smugglers prey upon the stock of Arizona settlers almost at will; and

Whereas large sums are expended annually by the United States of America and the State of Arizona in the prevention of diseases of live stock, and great precautions are taken to prevent the introduction of "Texas-fever ticks," known to exist in Mexico, and infected stock may be turned loose on the open range in Mexico and will roam at will across the line, and in drift weather often penetrate far into the interior, thereby endangering the live stock of the whole country; and the nature of the country is such that an effective patrol is impracticable with the line open at all points; and as evidence of the foregoing there now exist countless well-beaten trails and wagon roads leading in and out of Mexico far from ports of entry; and

Whereas Arizona settlers have erected fences along said border with no legal right to same, and have been unable to maintain said fences; and

Whereas the Government is receiving liberal fees through its forest-reserve department for grazing, timber, and wood on large areas of land adjacent to the line, and a good barbed-wire fence could be placed along the line for a small cost; and

Whereas all law-abiding citizens residing near the border would heartily cooperate in the upkeep of such a fence, and such a fence would enable the customs, sanitary, immigration, and peace officers both of the United States and of the State of Arizona to enforce the laws with facility and thoroughness, an impossibility under the present conditions, and that the lives and property of the people residing along the border would be greatly protected, and they might proceed to the pursuit of their industries rather than spend their time on constant guard; and

Whereas the State of Arizona is now represented in Congress by the Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST, and the Hon. CARL HAYDEN: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives and the Senate of the State of Arizona, That we most earnestly request and urge that the necessary legislative action be taken to build a fence along the border line through the length of Arizona and at such other places where like conditions prevail.

And we will ever pray.

STATE OF ARIZONA,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Arizona, ss:

I, Sidney P. Osborn, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the within is a true and complete transcript of senate joint memorial No. 1 of the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, entitled "Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $300,000 for suppressing carnivorous wild animals destructive to live stock in the public-land States of the West," as is shown by the original on file in this department.

Senate joint memorial 1.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, petitioning the United States Government to appropriate $300,000 for suppressing carnivorous wild animals destructive to live stock in the public-land States of the West.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the governor and Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represent that—

Whereas in the Western States, known as the public-land States, the losses of live stock and poultry due to the attacks of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears amount to not less than $18,000,000 annually; and

Whereas in these western public-land States the State, county, and stockmen do now and have for years paid large bounties and used other means to bring about the eradication of these carnivorous wild animals; and

Whereas in these western public-land States there is now withdrawn from settlement in some form or other approximately 225,000,000 acres of Federal land, which land constitutes the principal breeding ground and refuge of these carnivorous wild animals and enables them to increase their numbers in spite of the efforts made by State, county, and stockmen to exterminate them: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of Arizona does hereby most respectfully urge and request that Congress immediately appropriate the sum of $300,000 to be used by the United States Department of Agriculture for the destruction of coyotes, wolves, wildcats, cougars, and bears in these western public-land States in order that the meat supply of the Nation may be increased and the proper development of the West encouraged.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward a copy of this memorial and this resolution to the President of the Senate of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Representatives of Arizona in Congress, and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of the legislation herein asked for.

I, Sidney P. Senate joint memorial 5.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, respectfully represent—

Whereas in the year 1863, or thereabout, the Congress of the United States of America did grant to the heirs of one Luis Maria Baca, deceased, certain large tracts of land, to be located upon that public domain anywhere within the area of the Territory of New Mexico, of which Territory the present State of Arizona was then a part; and

Whereas one of the said tracts, embracing 100,000 acres of land, was located within the area that is embraced now within the county of Santa Cruz, State of Arizona, and is known as Baca float grant No. 3; and

Whereas no effort was made upon the part of the claimants of said Baca float grant No. 3 to complete and perfect their title to said land grant, and the Interior Department always maintained that it was invalid, owing to the failure of the claimants to comply with the provisions of the act of Congress granting the same; and

Whereas when after about 40 years said claimants applied for confirmation of said grant the surveyor general of Arizona, to whom the matter had been referred, recommended rejection of said Baca float grant No. 3 on the ground of noncompliance with the provisions of the act of Congress aforesaid; and, upon appeal, the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior did so reject said Baca float grant No. 3 for the reasons set forth hereinbefore; and

Whereas the Interior Department of the United States, through its general and local land offices, did accept filings of homestead entries upon lands embraced within the area of said Baca float grant No. 3, and the entrymen who made said entries located upon said lands in good faith, lived there many years, cultivating and improving them in accordance with law; and

Whereas by a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States said Baca float grant No. 3 has been declared valid, and the homestead entrymen, described hereinbefore, are subject to ejectment and dispossession of lands they have held and cultivated from 25 to 30 years, to their great loss and damage: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and is hereby, memorialized to enact such measure of relief to said homestead entrymen occupying lands upon the Baca float grant No. 3 whereby they may be granted within the State of Arizona other lands upon the public domain in lieu of those they have occupied heretofore, and that they may be permitted to make final proof by showing the necessary residence and improvement of the lands they have occupied heretofore within the area of Baca float grant No. 3; be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representative from Arizona in the Congress of the United States of America are hereby requested to use their best efforts toward the enactment of the necessary legislation for the relief of the homestead entrymen who are affected by the circumstances hereinbefore set forth.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward certified copies of this memorial to each of the Arizona delegation in Congress.

Passed by the house March 9, 1915.

Passed by the senate, amended, March 10, 1915.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona, in session convened, respectfully represent—

Whereas the Grand Canyon of the Colorado is one of the most wonderful sights in the world and is annually attracting and receiving the attention of an increasing number of the citizens of the United States and tourists; and

Whereas there is a good road extending from Grand Canyon Station to the Hermit Trail, which road is known as the Hermit Rim Road, and is adapted to the use of automobiles and motor-driven vehicles; and

Whereas by an order of the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, which order your memorialists are informed was issued at the instigation of a railway company, the said road, 7½ miles long, is closed to automobiles or motor-driven vehicles and can be used only by horse-drawn vehicles; and

Whereas the said railway company maintains a livery equipment for the purpose of hauling tourists over this road at $3 each, and such order is a distinct annoyance to the traveling and local automobilists: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested to investigate the facts herein set forth, and if same are found to be correct to have the said order rescinded.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the honorable Secretary of Agriculture, and to the Members of Congress from this State, and the latter are requested to use every honorable means to secure favorable action hereon.

W. P. SIMS,
President of the Senate.
WM. E. BROOKS,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint memorial for supplying water on the Indian reservation near Parker, Ariz., and opening unallotted lands to settlement.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Second Legislature of the State of Arizona in regular session convened, respectfully represent—

That during the years of 1908 and 1909 the then Indian agent of the Colorado River Indian Reservation, under authority of the Department of the Interior, granted numerous permits to persons to settle upon certain lots in the Parker town site, Yuma County, Ariz.

That an appraisement was made of the lots of said town site under the direction of the Department of the Interior during the year 1909, and the persons occupying lots under permits granted by the department were given a preference right to purchase said lots.

That about 90 days thereafter a second appraisement of all lots in the Parker town site, including those occupied by permittees, was ordered by the Department of the Interior, and the valuation was raised from 300 to 600 per cent above the figures set forth in the first appraisement. That this raise in appraised values was made because of the fact that the town site of Parker is within a short distance of the allotted Indian land on the Colorado River Indian Reservation, the surplus area of which was planned by the Department of the Interior to be opened to purchase and settlement at an early date.

That the said permittees occupying lots upon the Parker town site have paid to the United States under the valuations of town lots under the second appraisement the sum of $24,562.

That on May 10, 1910, the authorities of the United States held an auction sale of lots within the Parker town site and $56,698 worth of said lots were sold to residents of Parker and other investors. That $37,623 have been paid to the United States for lots purchased at said auction sale and there is still owing to the United States upon said sales the sum of $19,075.

That immediately prior to the auction sale of town-site lots at Parker Congress passed an act as follows:

"For the construction of a pumping plant to be used for irrigation purposes on the Colorado River Reservation, together with the necessary canals and laterals, for the utilization of water in connection therewith, for the purpose of securing an appropriation of water for the irrigation of approximately 150,000 acres of land, $50,000 to be reimbursed from the sale of the surplus lands of the reservation."

That the above act was in effect a representation by the United States that the surplus land of the Colorado River Indian Reservation was soon to be opened to settlement and entry by bona fide settlers. That the lots put up for sale at said auction had a prospective value only upon the assumption that said surplus lands would be opened to settlement at an early date. That the enormous increase in the valuation of lots in the Parker town site by the second appraisement above referred to was only justified by the carrying out of the implied promise contained in the above act, that the surplus lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation would be open to settlement.

That the town site of Parker is on a barren desert, on land having an intrinsic value of less than $1 an acre.

That whatever added value it may have arises from the fact that it is adjacent to the bottom lands of the Colorado River Indian Reservation in which the surplus lands above referred to lie, and unless said lands are opened to settlement and entry the town site of Parker is worth little or no more than any other desert land.

That the residents of Parker and numerous other residents of the State of Arizona interested therein, who were induced to purchase lots in the Parker town site by reason of the implied promise of the United States above set forth, to open the reservation lands to entry, have repeatedly petitioned Congress and the Department of the Interior for the opening of said surplus lands.

That said purchasers of lots in Parker have further evidenced their reliance upon said implied promise of the United States to open said lands by investing large sums of money in buildings and improvements in said town of Parker, all of which will be worthless unless the said lands are opened to settlement.

That the allotments of land to the Indians belonging on said reservation have been approved by the Department of the Interior, and the surplus land, amounting to approximately 125,000 acres, which might be open to entry, is segregated.

That to the best knowledge and belief of your memorialists there exists a sufficient flow of underground water for the irrigation and reclamation of the surplus lands.

That the surplus Indian lands above described are highly desirable as prospective farms and hundreds of energetic and enterprising citizens of this State alone are awaiting the opportunity to secure tracts of lands for the purpose of making their homes thereon. That to the best knowledge and belief of your memorialists a large amount of the delay in opening the surplus lands of said reservation to settlement in accordance with the said implied promise of the United States has been caused by unnecessary entanglements of official red tape in the various bureaus at Washington having charge of reclamation work and Indian affairs.

That another reason which has been assigned for the delay in opening said lands for settlement is the fact that people having large cattle interests have leased certain of the lands involved and have been exerting their influence to delay the opening of said lands for settlement: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, urged to enact any legislation which may be necessary for the opening for settlement of said lands, to the end that the implied promise of the United States made to the settlers and purchasers of lots within the Parker town site, to the effect that Indian lands within the Indian reservation would be opened for settlement, be carried out.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be forwarded to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Secretary of the Interior, and to the Representatives of Arizona in Congress; and that our Representatives in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to do all in their power to accomplish the enactment of such legislation.

Passed the house March 4, 1915, by a vote of 28 ayes, 0 noes, 7 absent, 0 excused.

WILLIAM E. BROOKS,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to present a petition of the ornamental leaded stained glass manufacturers of the city of Detroit, which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the reading of a petition. Unless there is objection, such will be the order. The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., November 16, 1915.

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We, the undersigned petitioners and ornamental leaded stained-glass manufacturers of the city of Detroit and State of Michigan, respectfully present to you the injustices of the "Underwood bill."

Ours is one of the industries that has been most seriously affected by this bill, with results so far-reaching as to jeopardize legitimate profits of manufacturers and imperil a decent standard of living of thousands of workmen.

We therefore most earnestly beg your assistance for a relief from this injustice by means of a protective-tariff law, based on fair-mindedness and national business solidarity.

Trusting, with your cooperation, we may bring about the proper adjustment of the present unfortunate condition, we remain,

Very respectfully, yours,

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) regulating the removal of sand or other material from navigable rivers, harbors, and lakes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LANE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) calling upon the President of the United States to convene a congress of neutral nations to offer mediation to the belligerents in Europe; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further bills or joint resolutions, concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call attention to the fact that a bill was read the first time and will come up for the second reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be reached in regular order.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. VARDAMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 24), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same are hereby, authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, and to employ such assistants as may be required to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that such committee, or subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate or during the vacation of the Senate at any place in the United States.

TAX ON MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. KENYON. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 22) was read, as follows:

Whereas under the Constitution Congress has power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; and

Whereas it is apparent from the message of the President of the United States to Congress, recently delivered, that he desires revenues raised for an elaborate plan of national defense; and

Whereas the general welfare of the United States has been imperiled by the manufacture and shipment of munitions of war in large quantities to foreign nations; and

Whereas the extensive policy of national preparedness advocated by the President in his message has been made necessary, if at all, by the irritation caused to other nations by said shipments of arms and munitions; and

Whereas a few manufacturers making said arms and munitions have made tremendous profits thereby, and there has been no profit to the country at large, except as may be incident to the employment of those in said factories; and

Whereas prosperity based on the profit in making instrumentalities to kill people can not be a lasting or satisfactory prosperity; and

Whereas the shipment of arms and munitions of war to foreign nations, resulting in profit to the few has imperiled the many; and

Whereas justice requires that those making the huge profits of said munitions of war shall pay the expense of preparedness made necessary by their gain: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that in raising the revenue necessary for any preparedness additional to that in times of peace taxes shall be levied on arms and munitions of war to such an extent as to produce sufficient revenue for any defense program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table subject to the further order of the Senate.

GRACE L. O'BRIEN.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 25), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Grace L. O'Brien, widow of John H. O'Brien, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FRAUDULENT USE OF THE MAILS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill for second reading and reference.

The bill (S. 1558) to prevent the use of the mails and of the telegraph and telephone in furtherance of fraudulent and harmful transactions on stock exchanges was read the second time by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On Friday last objection was made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the second reading of the bill, so that it went over until to-day. The Chair now lays it before the Senate for its disposition, the bill having been read twice by title.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, my purpose the other day in objecting to the consideration of the bill was to secure time for its examination, and then to secure if necessary the attention of the Senate in order that it might be properly referred.

The bill is, as I understand, practically identical with a bill introduced at the last session by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency. In my opinion, it never should have gone to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It has nothing to do with the regulation of banks, and nothing to do with the regulation of currency. It relates wholly to the Post Office Department and to the regulation of stock exchanges through the power of the Postmaster General. I therefore move—and I hope I may have the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency—that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the bill proposing a regulation of stock exchanges was the result of a prolonged examination made by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives. It is the same bill, substantially, which they recommended, a bill proposing to require the stock exchanges to become entitled under a charter to transact their business. At present the stock exchanges are private associations without any authority in the public to safeguard their transactions by public supervision.

The practices which have been complained of are what are called matched orders, washed sales, and manipulation, by which a false and fictitious market price is apparently fixed to a stock, the public being deluded into the belief that that stock has a large public demand and can be readily sold at a fixed price. The public is led by such false appearances to invest its funds in these stocks at a certain price. Thereafter those who manipulate the stock, who are engaged in bulling the stock, drop out from under it, and the public is permitted to suffer a tremendous loss in money. It is a fraud upon the people of the United States.

The governors of the stock exchange in New York gave assurances that they were strongly desirous of preventing such practices, but it is extremely difficult for them to accomplish that as a private association. The governors would have to assume the responsibility of charging men with the manipulation, and so forth, which might be more properly done by public officials.

The purpose of this bill is to have a charter issued by the State in which the association is doing business, the charter providing that there shall be no washed sales, matched orders, manipulation, or other fraudulent transactions; that there shall be reasonable publicity, and that a violation then of the terms of the charter shall be punished by the Post Office Department withholding their access to the mails until the cause of complaint is removed. It is a very reasonable and proper way to exercise the powers of the United States.

The Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate has had this bill under advisement for two years and has expended over a thousand dollars in hearings extended to the officers of the stock exchanges. That committee has considered the matter quite at length, and its members having had it in charge, having listened to the presentation of the evidence, are prepared better than another and a new committee would be to consider this measure. Furthermore, a fundamental reason justifies its going to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because through the stock exchanges our country heretofore has been thrown into panic. When the present war came on the importance of this matter was so great that the governors of the stock exchange, under the influence of the great banks of New York, themselves voluntarily closed the stock exchange until the country could adjust itself to the new conditions.

These stocks are used as collateral in the great banks and the reserves which are piled up in New York City are used for the purpose of carrying the stocks on the stock market, so that the stability of the banking system of the United States is vitally concerned in the proper conduct of the stock exchanges. It is for that reason that the Banking and Currency Committee of the House and the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate have heretofore had jurisdiction of the measure, and I think it would be very much out of order to deprive that committee of its jurisdiction and transfer it to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, which has to deal with a totally different subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to again read the title of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1558) to prevent the use of the mails and of the telegraph and telephone in furtherance of fraudulent and harmful transactions on stock exchanges.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the title of the bill clearly indicates to which committee it should be sent. There is not a line or a suggestion anywhere in the bill that relates to banking and currency. It is purely an administrative measure, and the Post Office Department is charged with its administration. The bill is loaded from one end to the other with limitations and instructions directed to the Postmaster General and the Post Office Department. The Banking and Currency Committee has nothing in the world to do with the provisions of the bill; but, as I have said, it is purely and simply a post-office matter.

I want to say, Mr. President, that to send this bill, written as it is, intending to accomplish the purpose that it seeks to accomplish, to any other than the Post Office Committee would be a clear indication on the part of the Senate that they do not believe the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads is competent to deal with matters relating to the Post Office Department. I hope that the bill will be sent to the proper committee, which, in my opinion, is the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to refer the bill to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. OWEN. I call for a division upon that motion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when Mr. LEWIS's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. LEWIS] is confined to his room by illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a pair with that Senator, and withhold my vote.

Mr. VARDAMAN (when Mr. SHIELDS's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. He is absent in the performance of important business.

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I do not see him in his seat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. Not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON];

The senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 25, as follows:

THE NATIONAL BANK ACT.

Mr. OWEN. I send to the desk a copy of the national bank act as amended, the Federal reserve act, and other laws relating to national banks compiled by the Comptroller of the Currency, and ask to have it printed as a public document. The plates are already in the Government Printing Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the order, unless there is objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the order is entered I desire to learn whether it is a departmental document? I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma that question.

Mr. OWEN. It is the national bank act, together with the Federal reserve act, which has been compiled by the Comptroller of the Currency. It is necessary for the banks of the country to have copies of these acts easily available.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say that there has been a rule of the Printing Committees of both Houses not to make a departmental document a public document. I suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma to have the matter referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

Mr. OWEN. I shall be glad to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The former order will be modified in that respect, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered; and the matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

JOHN WARWICK DANIEL (S. DOC. NO. 17).

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, on the 26th day of May last a bronze statue of my late colleague, Senator Daniel, was unveiled at the city of Lynchburg, Va. It is the work of the famous sculptor, Sir Moses Ezekiel, a native of Virginia, but now residing in Rome. On the occasion of the unveiling of the statue a very interesting and able address was delivered by Prof. W. M. Thornton, of the University of Virginia, who is a distinguished scholar. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Virginia will be granted, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. THOMPSON. Pursuant to the notice which I gave on the 10th instant, I submit the following resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 23) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXII of the standing rules of the Senate be amended as follows: After the last paragraph of Rule XXII add the following:

"Provided, however, That any Senator arising in his place and asserting that in his opinion an attempt is being made on the floor of the Senate to obstruct, hinder, or delay the right of the Senate to proceed to a vote, the Chair shall, without permitting any debate thereon, put the question to the Senate:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that an attempt is being made to obstruct, hinder, or delay a vote?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative, then it shall be in order, to the exclusion of all other questions, for any Senator to move to limit debate on the pending bill or resolution and all amendments thereto, and the said motion shall be decided without debate. And thereafter, the motion being carried, each Senator shall be entitled to speak not to exceed one hour in all on the bill, including all amendments offered thereto and all motions and other proceedings in any way affecting the same."

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on the 7th instant I introduced a resolution (S. Res. 9) calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to inform the Senate the cause of the nine years' delay in the opening of the Colville Indian Reservation in accordance with the provisions of the law of March 22, 1906. Since the introduction of the resolution I have had a conference with the Secretary of the Interior, and he has fixed a definite date for the opening of that reservation—July 1, 1916. Therefore, nothing can be accomplished by further inquiry of the Secretary of the Interior, the matter having been disposed of. I therefore ask that the resolution lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such will be the action of the Senate, unless there is objection. The Chair hears none.

CLERKS TO SENATORS.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, on the 10th instant I gave notice of an amendment which I intended to propose to the rules. I desire to submit a resolution embodying the proposed amendment, and I want to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Rules to it. We had some discussion with reference to it at the last session of Congress, and the chairman gave us some assurance that during the vacation the committee would try to give the subject consideration. I hope that has been done; but, at any rate, I trust that we may have some action in regard to the matter before very long. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington submits a resolution which, without objection, will be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. J. Res. 35) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Joint resolution providing for employees to Senators and Senate committees, and fixing their compensation, commencing with the beginning of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Resolved, etc., That, commencing with the beginning of the Sixty-fifth Congress, each chairman of a first-class committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $3,000, and who shall also act as clerk of his committee; an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,500, and who shall also act as assistant clerk to his committee; and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, to be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum; and a messenger, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum; each chairman of a second-class committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,750, and who shall act as clerk of his committee; an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and who shall also act as assistant clerk of his committee; and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, to be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum; and a messenger, to be paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum; and each Senator not the chairman of a committee shall have a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $2,500; an assistant secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $1,800; and, during the sessions of the Senate, a stenographer, who shall be paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum; and any additional assistance that may be necessary in connection with committee or official senatorial work while the Senate is in session shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate only after due provision has been made therefor by appropriate resolution.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. GORE. Pursuant to the notice which I gave on the 10th instant, I submit the following resolutions proposing to amend certain rules of the Senate, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Senate resolution 27.

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by amending paragraph 2 of Rule III to read as follows:

"2. A quorum shall consist of a majority of the Senators duly chosen and sworn, except when the Senate is sitting as in Committee of the Whole, in which case 30 Senators shall constitute a quorum."

Senate resolution 28.

Resolved, That Rule XII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended as follows: Insert after the words "unless excused by the Senate" the following: "and every Senator not voting shall answer 'Present.'"

Senate resolution 29.

Resolved, That Rule XII of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended as follows: At the end of said rule add the following:

"3. Whenever upon any such roll call the number of Senators voting and answering 'present' shall not constitute a quorum, the presiding officer shall announce that a quorum of the Senate is not present, and unless the Senate shall adjourn a call of the Senate shall be considered as ordered and the Sergeant at Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members; and each Member so arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant at Arms before the Senate, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote, and his vote shall be recorded. Whenever those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the Senate the presiding officer shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with."

Senate resolution 30.

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following at the close of paragraph 1, Rule XV, as a part thereof:

"When any such bill or resolution has been so considered and reported to the Senate, with or without amendment, the same shall be voted on the third day thereafter, unless previously disposed of, or unless a later day shall have been fixed for such vote."

Senate resolution 31.

Resolved, That the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by adding the following paragraph to Rule XVI:

"The Senate may at any time on motion and without debate fix a day certain, to be not less than two whole days thereafter, if there be as many as seven days of the session remaining, on which a vote shall be taken on any pending general appropriation bill: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply when such bill contains general legislation or when such conference report involves general legislation not agreed to on the original passage of the bill. When the question as to whether such bill or report contains general legislation which has not been previously agreed to by the Senate shall be raised by motion, point of order, or otherwise, it shall require a majority of all the Senators elected and sworn to decide such question in the negative."

Senate resolution 32.

Resolved, That Rule XVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended as follows: Insert after the words "No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill," in the third paragraph of said rule, the following: "unless such amendment being germane to the subject matter of the bill shall propose to retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill."

Mr. JONES submitted a resolution (S. Res. 26) proposing an amendment to Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate, which was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That, beginning with the Sixty-fifth Congress, Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate be amended to read as follows:

"RULE XXV. The following standing committees shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

"COMMITTEES OF THE FIRST CLASS.

"A Committee on Appropriations.
"A Committee on Commerce.
"A Committee on Finance.
"A Committee on Foreign Relations.
"A Committee on Interstate Commerce.
"A Committee on the Judiciary.
"A Committee on Banking and Currency.
"A Committee on Public Lands.

"The foregoing committees shall consist of not to exceed 11 members each and shall be so constituted that each Member of the Senate shall be a member of one of said committees and no more.

"COMMITTEES OF THE SECOND CLASS.

"A Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.
"A Committee on the District of Columbia.
"A Committee on Rules.
"A Committee on the Census.
"A Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.
"A Committee on Claims.
"A Committee on Education and Labor.
"A Committee on Insular Affairs.
"A Committee on Immigration.
"A Committee on Military Affairs.
"A Committee on Naval Affairs.
"A Committee on Pensions.
"A Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
"A Committee on Printing, which shall have power to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.
"A Committee on Enrolled Bills, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee of the House of Representatives, and which, or some member of which, shall examine all bills or joint resolutions which shall have passed the Senate or both Houses to see that the same are correctly engrossed or enrolled, and, when signed by the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate, shall present the same forthwith, when they shall have originated in the Senate, to the President of the United States in person and report the fact and date of such presentation to the Senate.
"A Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which shall have power to act jointly with a similar committee of the House of Representatives.
"A Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

"The foregoing committees of the second class shall consist of not to exceed 13 members, and no Senator shall be placed upon more than two of said committees at the same time.

"SEC. 2. That the aforesaid committees shall continue and have the power to act until their successors are appointed."

OCCUPATION OF VERA CRUZ.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate for reference Senate resolution No. 15, introduced by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. As that Senator is not in his seat, unless there is objection, the matter will be laid over pending his return.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate resolution No. 11, introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Morning business is closed. Under the notice heretofore given, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I ask unanimous consent that so much of Rule XXIV as provides for the appointment of the standing and other committees of the Senate by ballot be suspended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I now offer a resolution providing for membership of the standing committees of the Senate for the Sixty-fourth Congress, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless there is objection, the resolution appointing the committees of the Senate will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

SOURCES OF REVENUE.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] is entitled to the floor. Will he yield to the Senator from Oklahoma for the purpose of submitting a resolution?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will yield if it will not provoke any debate. If it does, I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it will go over under the rule. The Secretary will read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 21), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to submit to the Senate an estimate of the probable revenue to be derived from the following duties and excise taxes, to wit:

First. A duty of 10 cents per pound on tea.

Second. A duty of $1\frac{5}{16}$ cents per pound on sugar.

Third. An excise tax of $1\frac{5}{16}$ cents per pound on sugar produced in the United States and its island possessions, to be paid at the factory or refinery, a portion of the latter tax equal to seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound to be suspended by presidential proclamation upon the signing of a protocol looking to the establishment of peace among the nations of Europe now at war.

Fourth. An excise tax of 25 cents per horsepower on the production of automobiles, to be paid by the manufacturer, such tax to be suspended by presidential proclamation at the end of six months after the signing of a protocol looking to the establishment of peace among the nations of Europe now at war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think it ought to go over under the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ascertain exactly what the resolution is. I could not hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has already been made, and the resolution under the rule will be printed and lie over for a day.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do, for the purpose he has indicated to me.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be until Thursday next, at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

MANUFACTURE OF ARMOR.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I call up from the table Senate bill 1417, introduced by me on the 10th instant, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays the bill before the Senate, and the Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

A bill (S. 1417) to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor for vessels of the Navy, said factory to have an annual capacity of twenty thousand tons of armor: Provided, That the cost of said factory, when completed, shall not exceed $11,000,000, which sum is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, for the purposes of this act and toward the purchase of a site for said factory, unless there is an available site already owned by the Government; in that case the full sum of $11,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the erection of said factory to make armor plate and any other material for the Navy that may be profitably produced therein, including all necessary drafting and clerical assistance, and to be available until expended.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the question of preparedness now so universally discussed is one requiring grave consideration and prompt action. There are all sorts of opinions and advice from all quarters—good, bad, and not only unwise, but unthinkable of adoption except by "wild men from Borneo." Mr. Bryan, who is the evangel of "peace at any price," is bitterly opposed to any and all increase, either in the Army or the Navy. I have been his friend both personally and politically for many long years; but he seems to be simply obsessed on this subject and has lost his usual poise. Ex-President Roosevelt, on the other hand, who snorts and roars like a veritable Bull of Bashan, poses as the god of war and clamors for a very large standing Army and great reserves. He reminds one of the giant in Mother Goose—

Fe, fi, fo, fum,
I smell the blood of a German man,
Be he live, or be he dead,
I'll grind his bones to make my bread.

You will all notice that I have taken some liberty with Mother Goose because it says "Englishman" not "German man."

While I realize there is need of a larger Army than we now have, and especially of officers who are trained in the handling of troops, common sense teaches me that if we legislate promptly to get an "adequate Navy," as called for in the last Democratic platform and demanded in louder and more clarion tones in the President's address to Congress last week, it would go further toward defending the country from foreign attack than would any other instrumentality we can provide. The Navy is spoken of—and rightly so—as our first line of defense; and I favor such a Navy as will make our country second to none on the water except England. It stands to reason that the stronger and more efficient Navy we have, the less need there will be for a great enlargement of the Army; for as our country is not likely to enter into a war of aggression anywhere, or under any provocation, and only seeks to defend itself and maintain the new Monroe doctrine as enunciated by President Wilson, if no enemy can land on our shores we would not need an Army to defend them, but could depend on volunteers and the National Guard in an emergency. But as I see it, no emergency can possibly arise if we have an "adequate Navy." Such a Navy is an imperative necessity, not only to national life and honor now, but to maintain the newer and nobler Monroe doctrine—"America for the Americans."

Just what vessels we ought to authorize to be built will be thrashed out by the Naval Committees of the House and Senate after consultation with the experts from the Navy Department. But there is one question which ought to be decided very promptly; and that is the authorization of the construction by the Government of its own armor plant. With this idea in view I introduced the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to build such a plant as soon as practicable; and I believe the very promptest action is necessary in both ends of the Capitol. The bill ought to go through this end of the Capitol and the other end, too, inside of 30 days and become a law, for with the utmost energy and industry both displayed it will take not less than a year to construct and equip such a plant and get it in running order. It is a gigantic task to construct such a plant, as everyone must see, and no red tape of any kind—least of all interminable debate on this floor or in the committees—should delay it in the slightest degree. The country ought to regard as a public enemy any Senator or Member of Congress who tries to delay or thwart this purpose. Any delay in beginning work would be criminal unless a continuance of the Republican program heretofore followed, of having the Treasury robbed right along, is to go on. I can not believe there are any such Republicans here.

The country is at present in the grasp of an Armor Trust, as it has been these 20 years. The committee appointed last winter to investigate this subject made its report in the expiring hours of the last session of Congress, when everything was under such pressure at both ends of the Capitol, and I doubt if many of you have even read it or had time to look into the matter at all. It is House Document 1620.

After most careful investigation in the time allowed us, making the most searching efforts to reach accurate conclusions, an armor factory of 20,000 tons' capacity was estimated to cost $10,331,906, while a factory of 10,000 tons' capacity would cost $6,635,107. It was deemed best to introduce the bill for a 20,000-ton plant rather than the smaller one, for the reason that armor manufactured in the larger plant will cost much less per ton than if made in the smaller one. Then, too, we will need that amount of armor, and more, for some years to come.

Whatever number of war vessels we finally conclude to build, armor of some sort will be necessary to give as much protection to the ships as is now thought wise and best. Of course the improvement of modern gunnery has shown conclusively that no armor ever manufactured, or that can be manufactured, can resist artillery as now made; just as no fortifications now in existence, or that can be built, except earthworks, are able to withstand the heavy shells now being used. All the naval officers I have talked with on this subject, and I have talked with many, unite in advising that battleships are the best kind to build. The lanes of commerce across the seas can be held indefinitely against fast cruisers. A fleet of battleships with enough scout cruisers and destroyers would be sufficient to sweep the seas of merchantmen. It is the possession of battleships as well as fast cruisers, that has enabled England to sweep the German flag from the ocean. Hence, the naval program proposed by the Secretary of the Navy asks us to provide for both kinds of vessels and many others. Therefore I take it for granted that armored vessels of an approved type from now on must be built, and we will make them unsinkable, if it is possible to do so.

The construction of an armor plant built and owned by the Government is the only protection against the robbery to which the Government has been compelled to submit for 20 years. In order to refresh the minds of men as to how long this fight has been in progress, as well as to enlighten them as to my own humble efforts to protect the Government, I ask permission to insert such parts of my first speech on armor plate, made in 1896, in this body, as I deem proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). Without objection it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, as a member of the Naval Committee I have followed the investigations by which we sought to arrive at the facts and the true inwardness of this armor and its cost, and I have some very strong opinions about it. Perhaps I am so constituted that I can not have any other kind of opinions except positive ones. It is doubtless a fact that I sometimes arrive at erroneous conclusions, all of which I am willing to acknowledge.

As I understand the situation, we have a monopoly in the United States created by the Government, paid for by the Government, and yet the men who make this armor plate and who have the monopoly in the business paid for by the Government are robbing the Government to-day unmercifully.

In the first place, we have a law forbidding contracts by the Secretary of the Navy for any vessel which shall use armor not manufactured in this country. I agree that that is patriotic and right and just. We ought to manufacture everything that we consume in this country. I am protectionist enough to go that far. It may astonish somebody to hear me say so, but I am honestly in favor of this country manufacturing everything that it consumes. But I do say that this Government ought not to be robbed by those whom it protects, and that the benefits to be derived should not go alone to the capital invested, but to the labor as well; that when they have had a reasonable protection and get a reasonable income on the capital and reasonable wages for the skilled labor that is far enough, and when we go further by our laws we just simply provide a means by which a certain class of men who are special favorites of the Government become millionaires at the expense of the taxpayers.

We are face to face with the fact that there are two armor manufactories in the United States—Carnegie and Bethlehem—and that you can not get any armor from any other factory than those two, either in the country or out of the country. The evidence is clear enough, and if anybody disputes it I want somebody to dispute the proposition which I now lay down, and which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] just enunciated, that the Government in making the original contracts with those armor manufacturers paid enough bonus over and above the reasonable price to pay for the factories. Does anybody dispute it?

Mr. HAWLEY. We do not know.

Mr. TILLMAN. You do not know? Well, I will let the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, have a word to say on that point. I ask that the Secretary read the part marked in the testimony given by him before the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, without objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

"Senator TILLMAN. I was absent for a few minutes, having been called out of the room unavoidably, and you may have touched upon the point; but let me ask on what, in making your contracts with the Carnegies, you based your action as to price?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. You were out, Senator. I said when I came to negotiate with Mr. Carnegie the negotiation began with Mr. Abbott, the manager of their works; and when Mr. Carnegie came into it later I started by insisting that they should reduce the price that was paid to Bethlehem. I thought that was an excessive price, and I wanted them to reduce that price.

"Senator TILLMAN. Did they mention as a reason why they could not reduce the price that they would be at a great expense?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Of course.

"Senator TILLMAN. Which would have to be considered in undertaking the contract?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Yes.

"Senator TILLMAN. Did they give you any estimates?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Oh, yes; verbally. No estimates in detail.

"Senator TILLMAN. Can you recall the amount roughly, generally?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. I think it was more than $2,000,000 that they would have to expend.

"Senator TILLMAN. That they would have to expend over and above their existing outlay?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Yes.

"Senator TILLMAN. Before they could make the armor?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Yes. I will not be positive about the precise figure. However, it was a very large sum.

"Senator HALE. They had a large plant for other purposes?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. They had a large plant.

"Senator TILLMAN. I knew they had a large plant. I am trying to get at what ought to be the present price of armor after the Government has practically paid for these plants in the original contracts. That is the point I want to strike.

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. As I stated, Mr. Carnegie said flatly, 'I will make no contract unless I can have the same terms that are accorded to Bethlehem, at the same prices and substantially the same quantity of armor. If you will give me that, I will found the plant; if you do not, I will not.'

"Senator TILLMAN. Did your experts, those who reported to you in regard to the delay in furnishing the armor and complying with the original contract of the Bethlehem Company, ever lead you to suppose that there was any intentional procrastination?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. No; not willful.

"Senator TILLMAN. Was it necessary?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Necessary in one sense. In the founding of that plant Bethlehem sought very largely to make its own tools instead of purchasing them. Then they had made great mistakes with their hammer. No; I am not willing to charge Bethlehem at all with any willful delay. The delay was very great; but I think the Senator was out when I stated that one of the controlling factors which led me to think it desirable to found a second plant was because the experience of the English armor makers is that in their largest establishments they turn out only about 300 tons a month each, and at 300 tons a month two establishments could manufacture armor for only about two battleships a year the size of the Indiana.

"Senator TILLMAN. This is merely a question as to your opinion, but let me ask you whether from your intimate knowledge of the matter you have any reason to believe that those two companies are in collusion or that they at that time had an understanding with each other?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. No; not at the time of making the contract, of course. I do not want to pass upon that question. I have no evidence sufficient to justify me in saying that they were in collusion. We were required to advertise for the materials.

"Senator TILLMAN. Did any other steel makers make any propositions or come to you?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. There is no one else in the country who has a plant, and so others could not compete.

"Senator TILLMAN. None except Carnegie and the Bethlehem Company.

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. They are the only two plants in the country that can compete.

"Senator TILLMAN. Are we then to-day practically forced to buy from those two or none?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. We are.

"Senator HALE. Unless we build a plant of our own?

"Senator TILLMAN. Or unless there are others who would go to the expense those firms have gone to?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Yes, sir; that is it, unless you found another plant.

"Senator TILLMAN. I just want to get the idea of a monopoly or of a combine between those companies brought out prominently in the investigation.

"Senator CHANDLER. Without reference to a combine, it is admitted that those two companies are the only ones now that can compete?

"Senator TILLMAN. I am not speaking of the present time.

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. You do not understand me as saying that there is any combine.

"Senator TILLMAN. I am trying to bring out the facts that will prove that, however.

"Senator HALE. At the time when, under the circumstances you have stated, you made the arrangement which resulted in the establishment of the second plant, was there anything that indicated any collusion or sympathy or correspondence between the Carnegies and the Bethlehem Co., or do you believe now that there was anything of the kind?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. No; there was nothing at the time.

"Senator HALE. On the other hand, was it not considered by you that you could create an additional and rival establishment to the Bethlehem Co.?

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. Yes, sir. I have assumed that if this Government had followed the practice of England and appropriated $100,000,000, or even $75,000,000, to a building scheme, to be expended so much per year during a series of years, the cost of our ships in every respect could have been greatly reduced, because more people would have gone into the business of furnishing the frames of ships, the plates of ships, the decking; more men would have gone into the projectile business; more armor men would have gone into the armor business. We could really have got up an active competition under a guaranty of constant and continuous employment for a series of years. But where you ask a man to found an expensive plant, costing millions of dollars, on a very small contract, with nothing more than a mere probability that something may afterwards follow, of course he is likely to exact a much higher price for that one contract.

"Senator HALE. That is true.

"Ex-Secretary TRACY. I assume now that if the present Congress should authorize the building of four more battleships in addition to the two being built, the present Secretary of the Navy could negotiate a contract for armor at considerably less than the present prices."

Mr. TILLMAN. From the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy it is very clear that when he took upon himself the responsibility of founding or attempting to found a new armor plant at Carnegie's, he hoped to get competition. We have seen that the competition is not in existence; that these people are together. We have seen that after the Government has paid an enormous price for the first contracts, aggregating something like twelve or fourteen million dollars, in which was included the cost of the factory or the additional expenditure to which they were put in order to be able to create the armor and make it, they still hold up and say, "You must now pay us just what you originally paid us. We will not reduce it." "Why?" "We have you by the throat. We have your Congress by the throat. We have men in the Senate and in the House who will stand by us. We propose to steal from this country or to take it vi et armis, by votes." That is what they say in plain English.

"The resolution of investigation directs your committee to inquire into the condition and character of all armor plate, bolts, and other appurtenances delivered to the Government by the Carnegie Steel Company and to investigate and inquire as to what amount of inferior or damaged plate, bolts, and other appurtenances had been delivered to the Government by said company, and the amount of compensation which should be paid to the Government in settlement for such damaged or inferior armor plate, bolts, and appurtenances. The committee can go no further into this investigation without knowing the actual ballistic resistance of groups of plates passed by a test of plates that did not really represent these groups. The company has admitted this charge. If the Government is precluded from making these tests at their expense by the settlement made January 18, 1894 (see House Executive Document, Fifty-third Congress, pages 37 and 38), they must be made at the expense of the Government. Believing that a test of these plates should be made, your committee have selected the plates which, in their opinion, ought to be tested. They recommend that the money necessary for such a test be taken from any moneys heretofore appropriated for the increase of the Navy under the head of 'Armor and armament.' They therefore recommend the adoption of the accompanying joint resolution (H. Res. 226):

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove from the ships hereinafter mentioned the armor plates hereinafter mentioned, and subject said armor plates to the same ballistic tests, in every respect, as were given to the plates upon the ballistic tests of which the respective groups of armor plate containing the hereinafter mentioned plates were accepted. The armor plates to be tested, with the ships from which they are to be removed, are as follows, to wit:

"From the ship Monadnock, the 9-inch belt plate, No. 10, starboard, manufacturing number 448;

"From the monitor Terror, the 7-inch belt plate, No. 6, starboard, manufacturing number 678;

"From the ship Oregon, the 8-inch barbette plate, No. 587;

"From the ship Indiana, the 4-inch casemate diagonal plate, No. 14, port, manufacturing number 233;

"From the ship Massachusetts, the 4-inch casemate door, No. 379½.

"Be it further resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the 13-inch belt plate KL, starboard, No. X8, from the ship Monterey, and ascertain whether said plate contains a pipe hole 4 feet long; and if such pipe hole be found, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized and directed to subject the said plate to a ballistic test identical in every particular with that which was given to the plate upon the test of which the group containing the said plate, X8, was accepted, and that the first shot be placed in that part of the plate containing the pipe hole.

"The Secretary of the Navy is further requested and directed to send to the Congress a full and detailed report of the hereinbefore-directed tests as soon as may be.

"The Members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives heretofore engaged in investigating the armor-plate frauds are hereby directed to witness, as far as possible, each of the hereinbefore-mentioned tests; and said tests are to be made at the Indian Head proving ground.

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to pay from any moneys heretofore appropriated for the increase of the Navy, under the head of armor and armament, such sums as may be necessary for the carrying out of the hereinbefore-directed tests, and for placing on the ships before mentioned other armor plates, in place of the plates removed for the purpose of being tested, as hereinbefore directed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will simply read a brief extract from the summing up of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives as to one of the armor-plate factories. Charges were made as to frauds in the manufacture of armor; that they were putting up shoddy, so to speak, if you can have shoddy steel; and the committee of the House formulated charges and sent for the experts and the employees and the bosses of the Carnegie Co., and upon their admitted statements, not denied, admitted in open court, so to speak, before the committee, the report was made. They confessed that they had put off fraudulent armor on the Government. The committee summed up in this way:

If the criminality of a wrongful act is to be measured by the deliberation with which it is committed, the magnitude of the evils likely to result from its perpetration, and the want of provocation with which it is done, the frauds which your committee have found are worthy to be called crimes. The servants of the Carnegie Steel Co. (whether with or without the knowledge of the company), to increase their gains, deliberately continued for many months to commit acts whose natural and probable consequence would be the sacrifice of the lives of our seamen in time of war, and with them, perhaps, the dearest interests of the Nation. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 28, pt. 7, 54th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 6054–6058, June 3, 1896.)

Mr. President, I came into the Senate in December, 1895, and was assigned to the Naval Committee at my request, and I have served on it ever since. I speak advisedly when I say that all these years since I have been a member of that committee the United States Government has been robbed unmercifully by the armor makers. I am going to ask the Secretary to read extracts from my speech delivered in this body March 1, 1897, as it was a continuation of the fight I began in 1896 and related to the armor frauds. They are applicable to the situation now existing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN. If we go back and trace the history of this armor-plate manufacture we find that during Mr. Cleveland's first term, when Secretary Whitney began what is known as the construction of the new Navy, the manufacture of armor according to the most approved methods was an unknown thing in this country, and that there was no plant capable of performing that work. The largest steel plant in the country at that time, I believe, was at Bethlehem, and Congress wisely, perhaps (I shall not pretend to say it was not wise), entered not into a contract, but it authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Works by which they were to construct a sufficient addition to their already large steel works to make this armor. The price fixed was away up yonder, some $600 or $700, I am not familiar with the exact amount, but it was $600 or $700 per ton, and it was generally understood in the debates and in the newspapers that the enormous price was given by reason of the fact that an enormous expenditure of three, four, or five million dollars was necessary, and the Government proposed by this large price to reimburse the Bethlehem Manufacturing Company in the contract which would then be let for its outlay. The proof is overwhelming in these reports, in the testimony taken before the Naval Committee in the investigation last winter, that the plant at Bethlehem, which was constructed in addition to what they already had, has been paid for twice over by this Government absolutely, and that they have made a present of it to the Bethlehem Company.

In a year or two after the contract was entered into at Bethlehem the new Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, finding that the delivery of armor from Bethlehem did not keep pace with the needs of the Navy, or for some other reason—that was the ostensible excuse—without authority from Congress, entered into a contract of his own with the Carnegie Works at Pittsburgh, by which they were to receive the same price for the armor that Bethlehem was receiving, and he thereby hoped, as he explained, to bring about competition in the price of armor, and have two plants instead of one, and thereby enable the Government to obtain all the armor it might want in the construction of the new Navy at reduced prices after a while. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 1, 1897, p. 2557.)

* * * * * * *

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, gentlemen, those of you who do not feel so thin-skinned, who know you are honest, who feel that you are the agent only of the people of the State which you represent, please listen.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE COMPANY.

Mr. TILLMAN. That was the Carnegie Co.

The SECRETARY (continuing):

"[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Aug. 23, 1894, p. 8638.]

"First. The plates did not receive the uniform treatment required by the specifications of the contracts. In many cases the treatment was irregular, and in other cases it was practically inefficient. The specifications of the contract of February 28, 1893, required that each plate should be annealed, oil tempered, and again annealed, the last process being an annealing one.

"Second. False reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made to the Government inspectors. This was in violation of paragraph 95 of the circular concerning armor-plate appurtenances, dated January 16, 1893, which was made a part of the contract. Paragraph 95 says:

"'The contractor shall state for each article in writing the exact treatment it has received.'

"The specifications of the contract of November 20, 1890, paragraph 164, says:

"'A written statement of work and contractor's tests to be commenced and in progress each day must be furnished to the chief inspector.'

"Third. No bolts received the double treatment provided for in the specifications of either contract. A report of a double treatment, however, was made to the Government inspectors.

"Fourth. Specimens taken from the plates both before and after treatment to ascertain the tensile strength of each plate were stretched without the knowledge of the Government inspectors, so as to increase their apparent tensile strength when actually tested.

"Fifth. False specimens taken from other plates were substituted for the specimens selected by the Government inspectors.

"Sixth. The testing machine was repeatedly manipulated by order of the superintendent of the armor-plate mill so as to increase the apparent tensile strength of the specimens. These specimens were juggled in measurement so as to increase their apparent ductility.

"Seventh. Various specimens selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated without their knowledge before they were submitted to test.

"Eighth. Plates selected by the Government inspectors for ballistic test were re-treated with the intention of improving their ballistic resistance, without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. In one case, at least, the conclusion is almost irresistible that the bottom of another plate was substituted for the top half of plate A 619 after it had been selected by the Government and while awaiting shipment to Indian Head. Upon this ballistic test a group of plates containing 348 tons, valued at about $180,000, were to be accepted or rejected. In three cases, at least, the plates selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated in this manner without their knowledge. These ballistic plates represented 779 tons of armor, valued at over $410,000. The groups represented by these three plates had all been submitted for premium of $30 per ton if they passed a more severe test than required for acceptance.

"Ninth. In violation of the specifications of the contract, pipes or shrinking cavities, erroneously called blowholes, in the plates were plugged by the contractors and the defects concealed from the Government inspectors. These cavities, in some cases, diminished the resistance and value of the plate.

"Tenth. The inspector's stamp was either duplicated or stolen, and used without the knowledge of the Government inspectors.

"Eleventh. The Government inspector in inspecting bolts was deceived by means of false templets or gauges."

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, those were the charges, and the testimony is there to show that every word of them was admitted and confessed before a committee of the House of Representatives, and that House, without a division—because even the Republicans over there dared not face their constituents for reelection and fight the investigation—passed a resolution to have certain plates taken off the vessels of the Navy and have them put through the necessary test to show the frauds and prove them. Mr. Carnegie was fined by the Secretary of the Navy and, by some hokus-pokus, this glorious President of ours, who, God be thanked, goes out of power in two days from now, remitted that fine. The thieves were caught; they confessed that they had robbed the Government; the House of Representatives sent to you a resolution to have certain plates tested upon your new Navy to prove the frauds which had been practiced upon the Government.

That resolution came over here and went to sleep and died without action, and Mr. Carnegie sports his steam yacht and floats back to Scotland to his game preserve, and writes gold-bug literature to tell the American people how they ought to behave themselves.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we have an armor trust now just as we have had all along, and it is doing business at the same old stands—Bethlehem, Carnegie, Midvale. The war in Europe and the enormous profits made in the manufacture of munitions of war have brought about the absorption of the Midvale Co. by the Bethlehem Co., I hear; and Mr. Schwab, who was Carnegie's foreman when the first fraud was exposed by the House committee in 1894, is now president of and largely owns the Bethlehem Steel Co. (See H. Rept. No. 1468, 53d Cong., 2d sess.)

This is all ancient history, Mr. President, and I am only bringing it forward to point the moral of this argument that I am making for an armor plant right now.

Mr. President, in this connection, I desire to say that to William E. Chandler, formerly a Senator from New Hampshire, credit is due for offering the first resolution in the Senate to reduce the price to be paid for armor. He and I served in the Senate together for many years, and he is now, like myself, old and somewhat feeble. He is not loved in the South, where the older generation was taught to hate him, and all southerners know him as "Old Bill Chandler"; for he was always active and a somewhat pestiferous man in reconstruction days; and besides he had "something to do" with counting Florida for Hayes in 1876. But I desire to say that for loyalty to the Navy and to the United States, and especially to New England, and for ability as a Senator he has been second to no man I have known in Washington. His heart is in the right place, and he is only selfish like the average Yankee. He is not as quick and alert minded—although as quick as lightning—as John C. Spooner, who added to his alertness of mind brilliancy of oratory and the greatest legal ability. It delights me to speak thus of two distinguished Republicans I have served with here, and I take occasion to say also that during my 20 years of service many of my warmest friends have been on the Republican side. They were partisan, as I am and have been always, but that did not hinder recognition of their lovable qualities and great ability.

Before leaving this phase of the subject I wish to say that the critics of the Navy Department under Secretary Daniels have been unusually active and outrageous in their work, not hesitating to even make false statements. One man particularly active in this criticism has been his immediate predecessor, Mr. George von L. Meyer. Mr. Meyer seems to be unconscious of the fact that in indicting the Navy, as he has, under Secretary Daniels, he, in truth, is indicting himself and his Republican predecessors in the Navy Department. The Congress has appropriated enough money, God knows; but it has been squandered, misappropriated, or spent unwisely. If Mr. Meyer should convict Secretary Daniels of gross negligence—which he can not do—he will damn forever, in the estimation of right-thinking men, the Republican Secretaries of the Navy who preceded him. Poor old Massachusetts, how unfortunate in giving birth to such a man as he! The grand old State deserves a better opinion than he has been giving it to the average man. I have known many noble and great men from that State; have associated on this floor with two of her greatest sons, Hoar and LODGE; and I feel sorry that she should be held up to scorn—if such a little and mean man can hold her up to scorn—by the actions of Mr. George von L. Meyer. But let me get back to the manufacture of armor plate.

In spite of all the proof brought to bear by me and others, Congress has continued year after year under Republican control to follow this outrageous policy of paying special interests and pets of the Republican Party enormous sums out of the Public Treasury. Now, it can only be stopped under Democratic administration, as far as the Navy is concerned, by the Government erecting its own armor plant. That is what this bill proposes to do and do at once.

The Government had to pay outrageous prices for smokeless powder for a long while, until it erected its own powder plant, and that plant is a protection against any inordinate profits to the Powder Trust supplying the Government all it needs. It will be the same way about armor and munitions, too. We now know what powder costs per pound and we could find out what the best armor costs per ton in the same way. The plea that sound public policy requires that private parties shall supply the Government all its munitions of war is not tenable at all, because there is no more certain way to encourage unfair dealing and imposition than to be at the mercy of anybody. Men are too selfish.

We simply can not afford in the present straitened circumstances of the Treasury to permit such stealing to go on any longer. To show it is going on now, in addition to the Report No. 1620, to which I have already referred, I quote some sentences from the last report of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, showing what difficulties he has had and what conclusions he has reached in regard to existing conditions in the matter of armor.

I ask to have the Secretary read from the report of the Secretary of the Navy which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD HAVE AN ARMOR-PLATE PLANT.

While the Navy Department has been able to supply other important needs in markets affording some competition, in the purchase of armor plate it has been restricted to making these large purchases practically without competition. The natural result has been that the makers of armor have fixed the price. There are only three firms which manufacture armor plate and for some years they have practically charged the same price per ton. In my report for 1913 I recounted the fact that when bids were invited for the Arizona, all three of these firms made identically the same bid to a cent. They justified this sham of bidding by saying that upon the last award when the newest of the companies underbid the two older ones the department made an award of one-third of the quantity desired to each firm at the lowest figure quoted. Thereafter there was no incentive on the part of the new company to compete in bidding, because when it made a lower price it only received one-third of the contract. All the bids made then were rejected, and when the manufacturers found the department would not pay their price, a reduction of $111,875 was made for the Arizona's armor over the price of that charged for the Pennsylvania, bought in 1912. The next year, when bids were opened for armor plate for three ships, upon the basis of buying at wholesale, it was natural to expect a material reduction in the price, but the three companies submitted bids for only a trifle less than the price they received for the armor for one ship in the preceding year. All these bids being rejected, upon the second opening of bids the department effected a saving of $738,648. The prices quoted this year for battleships No. 43 and No. 44 are practically the same as for the California, Idaho, and Mississippi.

It has been demonstrated beyond controversy that the prices charged by the armor-plate plants have no reference to competition and little reference to the cost of production. Recently one of these armor-plate factories at Midvale, Pa., the youngest of the three and the one that some years ago underbid the others, has passed into new hands. What effect this change of ownership will have remains to be seen. In the light of past experience there seems to be no hope for better prices for the Government except by the erection of a plant of its own. Under these conditions there is little probability of securing armor plate at a reasonable price from private companies unless the Government itself erects a plant and is able to manufacture armor plate whenever private companies do not fix a fair price. The last session of Congress appointed a committee composed of the chairmen of the Naval Affairs Committees, House and Senate, and the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. This committee made investigations and its report was filed toward the close of the last session of the Sixty-third Congress, but no action was taken upon it, as the committee had been unable to complete its report until a short time before adjournment of Congress. It is to be regretted that when the committee undertook the investigation it had no opportunity to compare the cost of making armor plate in this country with the cost abroad or to make a comparison of the operation of such a factory in various countries.

When the recommendation was first made for an armor-plate factory, it was expected that the committee would secure from other countries much information that would throw light upon the actual cost of a plant and its operation. With no opportunity to make such comparisons or to see any plants in operation except the three in our own country, the committee, with this limited opportunity to ascertain the world facts, made its report. It estimated that if our Government should establish a plant with the capacity of 10,000 tons, armor plate could be manufactured at $262.79 per ton, or a factory with 20,000 tons capacity at $230 per ton. The price charged the Government for the last armor plate purchased was $425 per ton, and the price in 1913 was $454 on contract let March 3, 1913, and $440 per ton on contract let November 17, 1913, and in 1912 (before the 8-hour law became effective) $420 per ton. This shows that a very large saving can be effected if the Congress makes an appropriation in accordance with my recommendation for the erection of an armor-plate plant.

In addition to the saving that could be effected, there is another consideration in favor of such a Government owned and operated plant that is entitled to great weight. The armor plate which we are now using on our ships has depended for improvements largely upon the recommendations of our expert naval officers. Such improvements as the service can suggest accrue to the private companies making the armor plate. As they may also manufacture for foreign Governments, these improvements are open to all the world when they should belong only to the American people. The ability to retain for ourselves all the advantages which the skill and knowledge of naval experts give to private manufacturers ought to belong only to our Navy. This additional reason for the establishment of a Government plant is not to be lightly regarded. Japan has erected its own armor-making plant. All that it learns about the process is kept a strict secret and is not known outside of Japan.

The recommendation I urged in 1913 and again in 1914 for the establishment of an armor-plate plant was not a new proposition. It had been made before. Indeed, the argument was so strong and so convincing that the naval act of June 7, 1900, after authorizing the construction of certain ships, contained the following provision:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels above referred to, provided such contracts can be made at a price which in his judgment is reasonable and equitable; but in case he is unable to make contracts for armor under the above conditions, he is hereby authorized and directed to procure a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor, and the sum of $4,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory."

In the next contract after the act of June 7, 1900, for armor plate the price charged the Government was $420 per ton for class A (Krupp) and $400 per ton for class B (Harvey). These prices are exclusive of royalties which the Government had to pay, as follows: Krupp, $21.85 per ton, and Harvey, $11.20 per ton. The Secretary of the Navy evidently, "in his judgment," thought the price "reasonable and equitable," for he took no step to spend the $4,000,000 appropriated toward the erection of a factory for the manufacture of armor, which he was directed to do unless he could secure a "reasonable and equitable" price.

In 1895 the same conditions which forces us to pay the price the manufacturers charge for armor plate caused the then Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, to make an investigation in this country and abroad. The result of his investigation was to recommend the building of a Government plant. No action was taken, as his report was made only a short time before his term expired. Since the passage of the naval act of June 7, 1900, directing the Secretary of the Navy to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor unless he could make contracts for it "at a price which in his judgment is reasonable and equitable," the Navy Department has spent $76,195,960 for armor for its ships. It is believed that if the intent of Congress in ordering the erection of a factory had been carried out at that time, the Government would have saved enough money on armor plate to own a plant as large as that owned by all three of the private companies, and in the meantime to have supplied the armor plate for its own ships at a less price than it has been compelled to pay.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I wish to emphasize and call special attention to what the Secretary says about the amount that we could have saved all these years if an armor factory had been authorized long ago.

So, Senators, there are no two sides to this question, no room for discussion—nothing for debate to hang on. Nothing but brazen effrontery and unbridled greed, aided by a revival of corruption in Washington, can delay the passage of this bill, and I hope, as I have said already, that it will become law inside of thirty days.

I once saw an appropriation made in both Houses of Congress, at the opening of the Spanish-American War, of $50,000,000, and it was done inside of two hours. Democrats and Republicans were tumbling over one another in a patriotic effort to give President McKinley full power. Times now are not like they were then, but the danger is even greater. Will Senators rise and do their duty, or will they haggle and discuss and waste words? Time only can tell.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PREPAREDNESS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, a few days ago I gave notice that I would address the Senate on Friday next. I think it is quite likely that the Senate will not desire to remain in session on that day, so I desire to change the time of the notice to Thursday instead of Friday.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SWANSON. At the request of the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF EX-SENATOR FRANCIS MARION COCKRELL.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of ex-Senator Francis Marion Cockrell, of the State of Missouri. I feel, in view of his long public service, that some expression of respect ought to be paid by the Senate. It is my purpose, therefore, in a moment, to move that the Senate adjourn out of respect for the memory of ex-Senator Cockrell.

At this time I desire to state that Francis Marion Cockrell was born in Johnson County, Mo., October 1, 1834. He attended the common schools of his county. He was graduated from Chapel Hill College, Lafayette County, Mo., in July, 1853. He studied law; was admitted to the bar in 1855, and practiced at Warrensburg, Mo. He served in the Confederate Army, rising from the rank of captain to that of brigade commander. He was appointed brigadier general July 18, 1863; was captured at Fort Blakely, Ala., April 9, 1865; and was paroled May 14, 1865. At the close of the war he returned to the practice of law; was elected to the United States Senate, and served continuously in this body from 1875 until 1905.

He was appointed interstate commerce commissioner in 1905 and served six years. In 1911 he was appointed commissioner for the United States to reestablish the boundary line between Texas and New Mexico. At the time of his death he was civilian member of the Board of Ordnance, War Department.

He died this morning at 9 o'clock at his home in the Buckingham Hotel, in the city of Washington. His funeral will occur at 2 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, December 14, from the headquarters of the Confederate Veterans of Washington, 1322 Vermont Avenue.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose at this time to undertake to lay before the Senate the facts touching the career of this great Missourian and great American. At the proper time his long and distinguished public service will be reviewed. I move, as a token of respect to his memory, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, December 16, 1915, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 13, 1915.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Lieut. Col. Thomas B. Dugan, Sixth Cavalry, to be colonel from December 9, 1915, vice Col. Harry C. Benson, unassigned, retired from active service December 8, 1915.

Maj. Selah R. H. Tompkins, Fifth Cavalry, to be lieutenant colonel from December 9, 1915, vice Lieut. Col. Thomas B. Dugan, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

INFANTRY ARM.

Capt. Howard R. Perry, Infantry, unassigned, to be major from December 5, 1915, vice Maj. Charles C. Clark, unassigned, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Rinaldo R. Wood, Twenty-fourth Infantry, to be captain from December 4, 1915, vice Capt. Milosh R. Hilgard, Fourteenth Infantry, detailed in the Quartermaster Corps.

First Lieut. Leonard H. Cook, Sixth Infantry, to be captain from December 5, 1915, vice Capt. Howard R. Perry, unassigned, promoted.

First Lieut. Horatio I. Lawrance, Ninth Infantry, to be captain from December 6, 1915, vice Capt. Thomas L. Smith, unassigned, retired from active service December 5, 1915.

Second Lieut. George A. Matile, Twenty-sixth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from December 1, 1915; vice First Lieut. Daniel M. Cheston, jr., Seventeenth Infantry, resigned November 30, 1915.

Second Lieut. Walter R. Weaver, Twenty-second Infantry, to be first lieutenant from December 4, 1915, vice First Lieut. Rinaldo R. Wood, Twenty-fourth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Alva Lee, Sixteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from December 5, 1915, vice First Lieut. Leonard H. Cook, Sixth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Roy W. Winton, Fourteenth Infantry, to be first lieutenant from December 6, 1915, vice First Lieut. Horatio I. Lawrance, Ninth Infantry, promoted.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate December 13, 1915.

SECRETARY OF STATE.

Robert Lansing to be Secretary of State.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 14, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Author of the universe, Father of all souls, above all, through all, in all, make us conscious of Thy presence and lead us by Thy holy influence to know Thy will, and give us the courage to obey it, that we may prove ourselves worthy sons in thought, word, and deed of the living God, and so fulfill the law and the prophets in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 10, 1915, was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of rural motor routes and the change brought about by the order of the Postmaster General.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rural motor routes. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a like request as to extending remarks on the question of the United States Government constructing and maintaining rural post roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the United States Government building and maintaining rural post roads. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK], it will be considered granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I want to inquire whether or not it is the practice of the House to permit the introduction of memorials addressed to Congress by the various State legislatures and have them extended in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. They are briefed and go through the box and are printed by title in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the Speaker permit a suggestion? I notice that in another distinguished legislative body they always introduce them and have them extended in the RECORD. While I would not presume to ask to have letters and telegrams and everything else that is sent to legislative Members inserted in the RECORD, it does seem to me that memorials formally submitted on public matters by the legislatures of the various States are entitled to be extended in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman must have noticed also that in another distinguished legislative body, not satisfied with having one Senator introduce a memorial and print it in the RECORD, another Senator from the same State introduces the same memorial, and sometimes on the same page of the RECORD it will be printed twice, and if not on the same page, then on a succeeding page. Having thus been printed twice in the Senate proceedings, does the gentleman think that it is necessary to have it printed 4 or 5 times more in the House proceedings in the case of a memorial from Colorado and 30 or 40 times more in the House proceedings in the case of a memorial, for example, from the Legislature of the State of New York?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly not; and I would not want to ask permission to have printed a memorial that a Member of another distinguished body had already inserted in the RECORD. But where such a memorial has not already been inserted on public matters I would like to have it printed in the RECORD. Or if it is deemed more appropriate for me to ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I can do it in that way. But I do not think we ought to deny ourselves the right to have these memorials inserted in the RECORD, the same as is done in another coordinate body.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself must know that to one who reads the RECORD the practice followed in another body is perfect nonsense and ought not to be enlarged here.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state for the information of Members that there must be 300 of these memorials now in the Speaker's office awaiting reference, and it is the invariable habit of these State legislatures when they send a copy of a memorial to one Senator or Representative from their State to send it to all of them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think they ought not to be published more than once. But in this case I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting three or four memorials from the Legislature of the State of Colorado.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting two or three memorials from the Colorado Legislature. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I simply wish to say——

Mr. BARNHART. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and that is the end of it.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS.

Mr. KALANIANAOLE, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. GALLAGHER, and Mr. WATSON of Virginia appeared at the bar of the House and the oath of office was administered to them by the Speaker.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. HAMLIN, who is at home on account of the serious illness of his mother.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent for the indefinite leave of absence of his colleague, Mr. HAMLIN, on account of the serious illness of his mother. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. MARTIN, for three days, on account of illness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. MARTIN, for three days, on account of illness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a similar request for my colleague, Mr. BOOHER, who, I believe is not here this morning. He notified me that he had serious illness in his family and might not be here. If he is not here, I make that request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. BOOHER, on account of sickness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter from a former Member of Congress to myself, and my reply thereto, on the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

CALVERT, TEX., November 10, 1915.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY, Corsicana, Tex.:

Permit me to say a few words on the question of national preparedness.

You are in better position to reach right conclusions than I am, but this is what I think: I do not think that there is any such danger threatening us as a Nation as to necessitate or justify so great an increase in our standing Army as proposed, nor do I think that the Navy should be increased much beyond what has already been provided for. Should there be some danger threatening us—which I do not believe—I would rather take the risk and in the emergency rely upon the wonderful resources of our Government than to so change the policy we have acted upon in the past. Should the preparation for war be commenced on the magnitude proposed it will absorb the revenues of the Government and necessitate a high protective tariff and be burdensome to the people. I am inclined to think—notwithstanding my confidence in the President—that this sudden clamor for preparedness is due in part to mercenary and not patriotic motives. While I would be much inclined to support the President in his policies, I regard this matter of too great importance for any intelligent Member of Congress to yield his convictions or change a well-considered judgment. I do not know your views on this question, but I have confidence that you will not be seized with war hysteria and lose sight of the consequences of extravagance and militarism.

Hoping that you may have a pleasant time in Washington this winter and asking to be remembered to my old friends there, I am,

Very truly, your friend,

SCOTT FIELD.

[To the above Judge HARDY made the following interesting response:]

CORSICANA, TEX., November 12, 1915.

Hon. SCOTT FIELD, Calvert, Tex.

DEAR SIR: I am just in receipt of your comments on the subject of our Army and Navy policy inclosed in your letter on another subject. If you have no objections, I will give it, together with this reply, to the press for publication if they desire to publish it.

Just before opening your letter I had made this memorandum apropos of the same subject: "For the first time in our history we have reached the era of fear, of the preachment of fear as the basis and groundwork of our great national-international policy. The advocacy of a policy of a great Navy and Army for whatever reasons it may in fact be favored can be based and presented to the public on no other grounds."

From this you will see that I entirely agree with your views.

Every year since I have been in Congress, just at the time when the naval appropriation bill was being prepared, we have had a great newspaper agitation attempting to arouse a widespread war scare. Sometimes it was the Japanese, and then again it was the Germans, against whom we must prepare to defend ourselves; but our Nation as a whole was so thoroughly fortified in the knowledge that for a hundred years we had no war except the Spanish War, which we had voluntarily launched ourselves, and that our firm but just treatment of other nations and our perfectly friendly relations with all European countries gave no grounds to fear war with them that the alarmist, the jingoes, and the interests' propagandists made little headway. They would have made even less but for the fact that our war with Spain generated a certain spirit of militarism which aided them, and our possession of the Philippines and racial controversy with the Japanese gave them some ground to preach the possibility of a war with Japan. They not only covered all the ground there was, but imagined and invented far more in order to give scare headlines. One of our jingoes even had the President of the United States practically on his knees to the Emperor of Japan, praying him for God's sake not to invade us and humbling himself in the dust in order to preserve our helpless country from Japanese conquest. Our common sense replied conclusively that we were four or five thousand miles away from Europe with the Atlantic waters between us; that Europe was not dwelling altogether in harmony herself; that none of her nations could afford to send their whole fleet away from home to attack us; and that our Navy was superior to any navy that could be sent against us, except perhaps that of Great Britain, and that not even a jingo could present a possibility of war between us and Great Britain. We replied that as to Japan our Navy was admittedly twice the strength of hers; that she was practically bankrupt; and that even if she desired, she could not finance a war against us. We showed also by naval experts that we did not have anywhere nearly a sufficient force to man and fight the ships we already had, and could not get them, since such a force admittedly must be trained several years to be efficient. We showed that every new battleship launched necessitates the tieing up of some ship already in commission on account of the want of men, and we showed further that our Navy was so unbalanced, so lacking in auxiliary ships, that common sense seemed to dictate that we should suspend building fighting ships until we rounded out our Navy by securing auxiliaries and additional crews and forces, so that we could use the ships we had in case of war. Notwithstanding all this, the agitators succeeded in gradually increasing our naval program and building more and more great battleships until the naval budget has reached the stupendous sum of $152,000,000 per annum, which is many times what we spent on the Navy the last time we had a Democratic administration. In the last 10 years we have spent more on our Navy than Germany and Japan together, yet we are now told our Navy is worthless, and we must increase our Navy and Army budget at the very least by $100,000,000 per annum for the next five years. The agitators do not dare let the public know what this means, and hence they publish that they propose to spend $500,000,000 on the Army and Navy in the next five years.

This does not look so big as it would if they published the truth, to wit, that this $500,000,000 is to be in addition to what we are now spending and that what they really propose is a minimum expenditure on the Army and Navy in the next five years of $1,750,000,000. This, mind you, is their minimum, and when we are launched on their program it will certainly grow, because our very activity in that line, combined with the activity of the private interests that profit by it, will further arouse the spirit of militarism and jingoism and evoke phantoms of war and rumors of war. I am not a "peace at any price" man. That is an odious epithet invented by jingoes and grafters to help destroy the sound argument that would allay the war hysteria which they seek to create and have created. In the mountains of Kentucky, where they drink moonshine whisky and have family feuds with combinations of families having offensive and defensive obligations, there may be some necessity for going armed. If I were a member of one of those families, I might go armed, or if I were daily going out into a community of armed and drunken people I would go armed; but since I do daily walk among sane, sober, and friendly people I do not buy a pistol. European nations have had a family feud, and feud has been fanned into fury by the same influences that are creating our hysteria here.

The European nations when this war is ended will be bankrupt and not anxious nor able to engage in any great war within the next 25 years. If we warred with them we would have to force the war on them. Every sane man in America knows this, and yet because we have read and talked so much about war within the last 15 months, we are more easily subject to war scare and hysteria, and taking advantage of this the interests have literally deluged the country with tons of literature whipping and driving our fear into frenzy. They are spending millions of dollars to do it. Not a mail pouch is opened in a second-class post office that does not carry hundreds of letters, circulars, magazines, and newspapers urging us to hurry up our preparations before the bogie man gets us. Our cities are all in panic, and the people in the interior have ceased to be amazed and begun to half accept as true the fearful warning and threatening so constantly dinned into their ears. Back of all this, in my opinion, is the purpose of the manufacturers of war munitions to sell their plants to the United States or to make them still profitable by selling their products to us after the war in Europe is over. To cap the climax of this campaign for war, just the other day my wife asked me what was the "Woman's Navy League." These fellows are actually beginning to send out special literature to the women in order to pile up dirty dollars for themselves while they stir the world to international slaughter.

Just one thing in conclusion. You speak of the President's position on the question, and of this matter being too important to permit intelligent Members of Congress to yield their convictions or change a well-considered judgment in order to meet the President's views. I think I know the President, and I do not believe he desires any man to violate his conscience, and certainly, while I am his loyal friend, I shall voice my convictions in this matter.

You note I do not discuss the big-army propaganda. It is a whole subject by itself. The policy of our national lifetime is sought to be overturned. The foolish claim is made that we are unable to defend ourselves because our men do not strut in military decoration. You and I know that thousands of young boys are turned out every year from our colleges and schools with military training, and these in time of need—if we had it—could educate the rest. If we adopt this new departure we may, when it is too late, find that we have created a system which is a menace to the liberties of our country.

Just one word more. You refer to the question of revenue. We Democrats have been sweating blood on that question. If we increase our expense by $100,000,000 we must go back to high tariff, and make ourselves a laughing stock, or issue bonds to pay current expenses, or increase the internal-revenue taxes, from all of which the good Lord deliver us.

Very truly, yours, RUFUS HARDY.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the regular business of the House is concluded to-morrow I may be permitted to address the House for one hour on the subject of national defense or preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, when the business of the House is disposed of, he be permitted to address the House for one hour on the question of preparedness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may have an hour to speak in the House after the disposition of the bill relating to the internal-revenue tax.

The SPEAKER. When—to-day?

Mr. MANN. No; it may not be for several days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that after the revenue bill is disposed of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] be permitted to address the House for one hour. Did the gentleman state the subject?

Mr. MANN. I did not state it, but I understand it is national defense.

Mr. ADAMSON. Reserving the right to object, I wish to state that the gentleman from Illinois knows that various gentlemen on both sides of the House have some bridge bills that they think are urgent, that I hope to get before the House, and I hope I may have unanimous consent to pass those bills.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that if the committee meets and reports these bills it will be very easy to get a call of committees, and it will not be necessary to ask unanimous consent. They will come before the House, and, there being no other business on the calendar, they will be reached at once.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman that it is desired that they reach the Senate and be passed there also before the holidays. Of course I shall not object to the gentleman from Massachusetts speaking.

Mr. MANN. If this request is granted, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] will not speak until after these bills are disposed of, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing the address of Edward F. McSweeney, chairman of the directors of the port of Boston, before the Twelfth Annual Convention of the National River and Harbor Congress on the obstacles to waterway and port development and their vital interests to American manufacturers and wage earners, and on the need of an American merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GREENE] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the address which he has described. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMPEACHMENT OF H. SNOWDEN MARSHALL.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, by virtue of the power conferred on me by the Constitution of the United States as a Member of this House, and to the end that justice may be restored in the administration of the office of United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, I impeach H. Snowden Marshall, United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, for the following specific offenses:

1. He has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute gross and notorious violations of law by the most powerful and dangerous criminal trusts and monopolies in the United States within his said judicial district.

2. He has prostituted the great office intrusted to him by the people to the service of the great criminal trusts.

3. He has used the powers of his said office for the purpose of publicly defaming, slandering, and libeling the good name of peaceful and law-abiding citizens of the United States, to their great injury.

4. He has violated persistently the eight-hour laws of the United States and of the State of New York.

5. He has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute men who have made the port of New York within his said district a naval base for foreign belligerent powers.

6. He has corruptly neglected and refused to prosecute violators of the Federal statutes prohibiting the loading and shipment of explosives on ships carrying passengers.

And for other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of this House to the fact that any attempt on the part of this man Marshall's political or financial masters to shield or to whitewash him or to interfere with or obstruct the processes of law and justice in this case will be sufficient to warrant the prompt and drastic action which I shall ask this House to take against all such interference.

Mr. Speaker, I move that this matter be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to refer his charges of impeachment to the Judiciary Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a speech delivered by the President of the United States on Friday last at Columbus, Ohio, before the Columbus (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, and also another speech delivered by the President of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, before the Affiliated Rural Churches of America.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the two speeches recently made by the President of the United States at Columbus, Ohio, be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I object.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the revenue measure and following the gentlemen who have already been granted permission to address the House, I may have the opportunity to address the House for one hour on the subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that after the revenue bill is disposed of and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] have made their speeches he may address the House for one hour on the subject of preparedness. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if that would throw the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Wyoming on the same day?

Mr. MONDELL. I hope that the House may have that delightful privilege. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. The hope that it would not was the reason that I asked the question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CENTIGRADE AND FAHRENHEIT THERMOMETERS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a discussion with reference to the use of the centigrade and Fahrenheit thermometers in scientific work of the United States Government and elsewhere.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a petition of the citizens of Hill County, Tex., and my reply thereto, on the question of the national defense.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a letter which he received from his Hill County constituents and his answer thereto on the subject of national defense. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE (H. DOC. NO. 2).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Clerk of the House, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

THE NOBEL PEACE PRIZE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a letter from the Secretary of State transmitting a copy of a circular issued by the Nobel committee as to the distribution of the Nobel peace prize for the year 1916, and without objection the Chair will have it printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The letter and circular are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 10, 1915.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: At the request of the secretary of the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament, I have the honor to inclose herewith for the information of the House of Representatives a copy of a circular issued by the Nobel committee, furnishing information as to the distribution of the Nobel peace prize for the year 1916.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant.

ROBERT LANSING.

NOBEL PEACE PRIZE.

All proposals of candidates for the Nobel peace prize, which is to be distributed December 10, 1916, must, in order to be taken into consideration, be laid before the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament by a duly qualified person before the 1st of February of the same year.

Any one of the following persons is held to be duly qualified: (a) Members and late members of the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament, as well as the advisers appointed at the Norwegian Nobel Institute; (b) members of Parliament and members of Government of the different States, as well as members of the Interparliamentary Union; (c) members of the International Arbitration Court at The Hague; (d) members of the Commission of the Permanent International Peace Bureau; (e) members and associates of the Institute of International Law; (f) university professors of political science and of law, of history, and of philosophy; and (g) persons who have received the Nobel peace prize.

The Nobel peace prize may also be accorded to institutions or associations.

According to the code of statutes, section 8, the grounds upon which any proposal is made must be stated and handed in along with such papers and other documents as may therein be referred to.

According to section 3 every written work, to qualify for a prize, must have appeared in print.

For particulars qualified persons are requested to apply to the office of the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament, Drammensvei 19, Christiania.

ELECTION OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of the standing committees of the House, a list of which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the election of members to the various committees, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] yield me a few minutes?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish first to express my appreciation of the courtesy of the majority. While they did not give to the minority all of the additional committee places for which I asked, I do not know but that on the whole they were quite as generous as I probably would have been if I had been in their place. When I realize that this side of the House will be the side that grants and does not take in a short time, I am rather glad, after all, that they fixed the proportion which we will assume the next time. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.] In the main, they granted all of the requests which I made. They have been very courteous in that respect and in respect to giving this side of the House a sufficient time to fairly consider the committee assignments.

I can not hope to have pleased or satisfied all, or perhaps many, on this side of the House. We have an additional number in the minority of 60 Members over the number in the last House. The additional number of committee places which we secured was, I believe, 35, but the difference between 35 and 60 does not represent the number of committee places lacking, because, in the main, the new Members are entitled to places on two committees and have received them. In my recommendations I have simply done the best I could. My office door has never been closed while I was in the office, and I have been there during all of the office hours from the beginning. I was glad to hear a statement made by any Member of the House or by any of his friends. I have packed no committees. I have not asked how Members of the House were determined to vote upon particular propositions, but have endeavored to represent as well as I could the membership on this side of the House.

We have a large number of former Members of the House, distinguished for their services, who have come back to the House. It was quite a question where they should be placed upon the committees. I was very much relieved by the action of one distinguished Member, which aided me in deciding what I would do in all of the other cases. We have one Member of the House who had long presided over the House, who had long presided over the Committee on Appropriations, and who has the respect of all of the Members of the House. I said to my colleague, Mr. CANNON, "You can select your place and have it." [Applause.] With a generosity and an unselfishness which has always characterized him, he said to me, "I would like to go upon the Committee on Appropriations and be placed below those who have been on it in the last House." [Applause.] And that is where he goes.

In order to make a sufficient number of committee assignments it was necessary for me to adopt the rule that as to certain committees Members who were assigned to those committees could not be assigned to any other committees. I made that rule concerning the Committees on Ways and Means, Appropriations, the Judiciary, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Rivers and Harbors, the Post Office and Post Roads, and Agriculture; and a good many Members of the House of former service who were upon these committees and upon some other committees were given the privilege of selecting which committee they would choose. That is the reason some Members have gone off certain committees and retained places on other committees in which they were especially interested or on which they held a higher rank. During all of the time that I have been working on the committees I have been impressed with the generosity and the lack of selfishness on the part of Members who have been to see me. I noticed the other day a cartoon in one of the evening papers representing the Members begging and imploring, grasping and demanding committee assignments. That has not been my experience. From the start the older Members have said to me, "We know the situation; we expect to lose where we have additional committees over our ranking committees," and the new Members have said to me, "We appreciate the situation; we do not expect to receive places on the highest ranking committees in the House."

I wish to thank this side of the House, both Republicans and Progressives, for the generosity, the unselfishness, the kindness which they have shown to all and have exhibited to me. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of the committees.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina on the election of the persons named in the list as members of the various committees.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING AND BINDING.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries shall be, and is hereby, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to have such printing and binding done as may be necessary for the transaction of its business.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana rise?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] to withhold the consideration of his resolution until I have submitted a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, there are about 58 or 60 standing committees in this House. It has been the custom in the past that each committee should present a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration, that it might have such printing and binding done as it deemed necessary in the transaction of its business. These resolutions have not all been in the same form, and it has been found by the Clerk of the House that some committees have broader privileges under the resolution offered than others. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if it would be proper to submit one resolution, or if it would be in order to offer one resolution, that would cover the printing and binding for all of these standing committees?

Mr. MANN. I suggest that it can be done by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Indiana offering one resolution to cover all of the committees?

Mr. MANN. Let the resolution be first submitted.

Mr. BARNHART. I send the resolution to the desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 58.

Resolved, That each standing committee of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be actually necessary in the transaction of its official business during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman, my recollection is that in the last House—the gentleman will know—we gave this privilege practically to all committees, including even, I think, the expenditure committees which never had had it before. Is that correct?

Mr. BARNHART. I think 52 of the 58 committees were given this privilege.

Mr. MANN. Fifty-two of the 57, it is probable. The Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers makes 58.

Mr. BARNHART. I think it was 52 of the 57 or 58, whichever it is.

Mr. MANN. Of course, those committees were committees probably like the Committee on Enrolled Bills, which does not require this, but take it anyhow.

Mr. BARNHART. Of course the gentleman from Illinois understands that after all it must be put up to the committees themselves as to what they deem actually necessary for the proper transaction of their business.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I quite appreciate that. I do not think there can be objection to this resolution, since the House under our economical friends on the other side have so extended the original privilege that they granted specially to each committee which never used to be done; but now it has been done, it seems to me it is better to have it uniform by one resolution than by having 57 varieties. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. Well, the gentleman from Illinois probably forgets that in a previous Congress we asked a specific ruling of the Chair that all of these resolutions be referred to the Committee on Printing and come on the floor in their regular order, and that such an order was made by the Speaker and then the members of the committee and the House proceeded to go along in the old-fashioned way.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I did not have the courage to stand out against the unanimous request for additional pork from that side of the House. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the form of the resolution of the gentleman from Indiana, and withdraw my resolution for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri withdraws his resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, just a moment. I did not catch the reading of the resolution, and I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana, as I did not catch the full import of it, under the resolution of the gentleman who is to decide as to the necessity for the printing?

Mr. BARNHART. The committee.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That is all right. I have no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a speech delivered by the President of the United States before the Columbus Chamber of Commerce, Columbus, Ohio, and his speech delivered before the Affiliated Rural Churches of America, at Columbus, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] asks unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD two speeches which the President made at Columbus, Ohio, the other day. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that due to my high regard and friendship for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRUMBAUGH] I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the fine distinction which my colleague makes between his respect for the gentleman from Ohio and the lack of respect for a certain very distinguished individual. I shall not object, and I would not even object if he asked to have printed in the RECORD the speech which the distinguished President made before the Democratic national committee. I hope somebody will make that request.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say——

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. That I have not stated that I had any disrespect for any gentleman occupying any high official position or otherwise. I just simply exercised my rights as a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS EXECUTIVE PAPERS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that there is a statutory Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers, a joint committee, and the Chair appoints Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland and Mr. BENNET of New York, with Mr. TALBOTT as chairman.

REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also desires to state that there are three vacancies in the Regents to the Smithsonian Institution, and the Chair appoints Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts and Mr. FERRIS of Oklahoma to succeed themselves and Mr. LLOYD of Missouri to succeed Mr. Connolly of Iowa, who does not return.

COMMITTTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 47.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or such subcommittees as it may designate, shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House during the Sixty-fourth Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, is the resolution subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. MOON. Then I move to amend it by adding the Committee——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the gentleman take care of his own committee.

Mr. MOON (continuing). The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; they had just as well go in together.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on the amendment, and that is this resolution being only for one committee is not subject to amendment by adding another.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is good.

Mr. MOON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. Not if you offer a resolution.

Mr. MOON. I withdraw the amendment if the gentleman objects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the passage of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

SALARIES FOR DECEMBER.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 61 authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1915, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration in the House, as in the Committee of the Whole, of the following joint resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the following resolution shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, let us have it read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 60) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For the participation by the Government of the United States in, and to meet the necessary expenses of, the Second Pan American Scientific Congress, whose sessions at Washington have been fixed for December 27, 1915, to January 8, 1916, inclusive, in addition to the sum of $50,000 heretofore appropriated therefor and including the same purposes authorized therein, the further sum of $35,000.

POSTAL SERVICE.

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES.

For mail bags, $100,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

PATENT OFFICE.

For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, exclusive of illustrations, and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices, at the Government Printing Office, $56,444.17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain briefly the necessity for each of these items?

Mr. FITZGERALD. These are three items that are of such emergency that it is necessary that provision be made for them before Congress takes the holiday recess. Yesterday 10 Members of the House who had been members of the Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress and, in addition, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] met in the Committee on Appropriations and had the representatives of the three departments appear before them in an informal way in order to obtain the information required to justify this action. The Pan American Scientific Congress meets in Washington on the 27th of December and runs to and including January 8, 1916. It has been in existence since 1892, but this Government first participated in the conference in 1908. Provision has been made for the expenditure of $50,000 to pay the expenses of the conference. Since the conference was planned it has taken on a scope not anticipated. It is expected that between 100 and 200 delegates will be present from Central and South American countries. They are to be accompanied by their wives, and there will be present in Washington about 300 delegates designated from different institutions in the United States. It is expected there will be, all told, about 800 persons in attendance at the congress. In order to make provision for the preliminary work necessary, which includes the preparation of the program and the correspondence regarding it in three different languages, to print the proceedings of the various subdivisions and the congress itself, and to make some provisions for the extension by this Government of some courtesies to those who are to participate, it has been found that at least $85,000 will be necessary.

The Post Office Department's estimate for mail bags for the current year was $480,000, and that sum was included in the Post Office appropriation bill. The bill failed of passage, and the continuing resolution made available the sum of $363,000, which we are informed has been entirely expended. There is very pressing necessity for immediate appropriation in order to obtain the necessary mail sacks for the heavy holiday mail.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that between now and the rush for Christmas they can expend this $100,000 in making mail bags?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not entirely; but they require about 200,000 additional mail sacks within the next three or four days.

Mr. MANN. Do they make them or purchase them? Have they already been made by somebody else?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. But they say they can secure delivery at once in the city of New York of 40,000 a day, and in Chicago of probably a similar amount, and in certain other parts of the country of other quantities.

In the Patent Office, under the provision regulating the expenditure of appropriations for public printing, only one-half of an appropriation can be expended in the first six months of the fiscal year. The Patent Office to-day or to-morrow will have exhausted its 50 per cent allotment, and in order to print the patents that are to be issued prior to the 1st of January the appropriation of $56,000 carried here is essential. If this money be not appropriated, the Patent Office must cease issuing patents between now and the 1st of January.

Mr. MANN. I notice that this is a joint resolution. Of course, the gentleman and I both know that joint resolutions and bills enacted into law have precisely the same effect. But they are not printed in the same way and not put in the same place in the Statutes at Large. The joint resolution is put away where very few people can find it. A law when enacted is in the form of a bill and put in the regular order. What is the object of putting this in the form of a joint resolution instead of in the form of a bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no special object, except it is customary in a condition such as the present to include these items in a joint resolution.

Mr. MANN. Every once in a while, when I am looking up something in the Statutes at Large, and know something about the dates, the indexes being unsatisfactory to everybody who does not make them up themselves, I run down in the statutes to about a certain date. If it is a law, I find it. Very likely I will not if it is a joint resolution. I might not think of its being a joint resolution, and turn over all the statutes, and after they are all disposed of find a few additional pages in the back end of the book and look there for a joint resolution. I think that would be done by a good many people under this practice.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That might be done by a good many persons, but I do not think it would be done by the gentleman from Illinois. If he really wanted to find something in the Statutes at Large, he would hunt for it in every conceivable place where it would be possible to find it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I hope hereafter the committee, when they want to make an appropriation, will prepare and report a bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee will take into careful consideration the suggestion the gentleman makes as to the practice to be followed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose the resolution, under the rule, Mr. Speaker, must be read by paragraphs?

Mr. MANN. For amendment; yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] desire time?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want any time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If not, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to have three or four minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We are under the five-minute rule, and the gentleman can proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is recognized.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the minority Members yesterday had not even been nominated as members of the committee, but we thought it best to accept the invitation of the chairman and attended the hearings, and I agree substantially to what the chairman says as to the necessity of these appropriations.

But I do think there is a slight distinction. I recognize that the appropriation for the mail bags is an urgent necessity. I recognize the same as to the appropriation for the Patent Office. But as to the third appropriation, for the entertainment of the scientific bodies here, while I think it is a very proper and a very worthy and commendable object and heartily approve it, I do not think that it is like the others, a necessity, and it occurs to me that in the present deplorable condition of the National Treasury, self-denial and the practice of the strictest economy are incumbent upon us. I recognize that the administration does not seem to take that view of it, for I observed that in the long message which the President read to us the other day there was not a single suggestion made or a single word spoken for economy.

Now, I hope the reason is that the administration has some well-defined plan and purpose of providing funds to reestablish our dissolving balance in the Treasury so that we need not be confined to necessities, but can indulge in comforts and in luxuries; and if that is so, it seems to me this third proposition is worthy and commendable and ought to be adopted. But if we are to be left in the future as now, with a Treasury balance shrinking day by day and month by month, it does seem to me that the strictest economy ought to be practiced, and that we should not appropriate for anything except sheer necessities.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States has invited representatives from every South American and Central American Government to participate in the Pan American Scientific Conference at Washington. There are certain obligations incumbent upon governments, as upon individuals. When a government undertakes to be host to representatives of other nations there are certain ordinary courtesies that must be extended to the visiting guests.

Of course I do not agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] in his opinion that the Treasury is in such condition as would necessitate the United States advertising to the world that it can not extend the courtesies customary under such circumstances to the representatives of nations upon this hemisphere. Even if it were, Mr. Speaker, instead of advertising the fact I should be ready to join with others in the Government in denying to myself and the people whom I represent something that they might particularly desire in order that the Government might not be lacking in ordinary and decent hospitality. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If the gentleman from Massachusetts be so alarmed at the condition of the Treasury of the United States, he will have an opportunity very speedily to join the Democratic side of the House in removing that danger. To-morrow or the day following a joint resolution will be presented by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] extending the present war-revenue act for one year. That will put a certain amount of revenue into the Treasury, which under the law will not be collected unless some such action be taken. I invite the gentleman from Massachusetts and his associates on that side who are alarmed at the condition of the Treasury and who fear perhaps that we might be doing something improper by making provision for the entertainment of those delegates to join this side of the House and pass that joint resolution unanimously, thereby not only appeasing their own consciences, but satisfying the patriotic people of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution to which the gentleman refers, that will be offered to-morrow, has not prevented the Treasury balance from shrinking in the last year. Does the gentleman think it is going to be adequate in the coming year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. I think there will be no trouble. I do not believe we shall need the advice, help, or assistance of the Republicans. We shall demonstrate to the country that the long-continued assertions that the Democrats are incompetent were, like so many other assertions of theirs, simply so many idle vaporings. We shall continue on the triumphant march of prosperity, happiness, and contentment, despite all of the calamity howling that will from time to time emanate from that side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I may say that the Democratic Party will incidentally continue to practice reckless and extravagant waste in the expenditure of the public money. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that is the most damaging shot that can be fired on that side of the House, I suggest that the Clerk read and that we transact the public business. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. In view of the fact that this bill or joint resolution appropriates money out of the Public Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in view of the fact of the changed methods of bookkeeping in the Treasury Department, which do not enable us now to say how much money there is in the Treasury not expended for other purposes, is the gentleman in a position to give us a statement of the amount of money in the Treasury now not appropriated for any other purpose?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I should not want to encourage the rapaciousness of that side of the House by letting them know just how much they might find in the Treasury. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] I would be glad to state the amount if the Republicans were not so anxious to know just how much there is left for them to squander. [Laughter.]

Mr. KREIDER. I am inclined to think there is not a great deal, because you have given notice of the bringing in of a measure to-morrow to continue to produce revenue for your depleted balance in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. ASHBROOK, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Sidney Smith (H. R. 18003, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. GRAY of New Jersey, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Edward Johnston (H. R. 5202, 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BURKE was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the affidavits filed by him in the Sixty-third Congress in support of H. R. 865.

SALE OF WASTE PAPER (H. DOC. NO. 395).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting a statement of money received from the sale of waste paper from December 1, 1914, to December 1, 1915, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY IN CHARGE OF THE DOORKEEPER (H. DOC. NO. 396).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of all property under his charge belonging to the United States, which, with the accompanying document, was referred to the Committee on Accounts and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

House resolution 49.

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 50.

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture of the House be granted permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—NATIONAL PARK IN HAWAII.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 68) to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. NOLAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess for 20 minutes. My object in making this unanimous-consent request is to give two representatives of the Woman's Voters' Convention, that met at San Francisco in September, representing the women voters of the United States, Mrs. Sarah Bard Field, of Oregon, and Miss Frances Jolliffe, an opportunity to address the Members of the House out of session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska. Where?

Mr. NOLAN. From the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there not a rule of the House which prohibits the Chair from entertaining a request to permit anyone not entitled to the floor to come on the floor of the House?

The SPEAKER. There is such a rule, which relates to the sessions of the House. Of course the House can stay in recess as long as it wants to.

Mr. MANN. The only request that is made is to take a recess.

Mr. NOLAN. I made the request that the House take a recess.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the Speaker can not submit a request to permit anyone except those designated in the rules to come on the floor of the House.

Mr. MANN. That is only while the House is in session.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House is practically in session during a recess.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The rule prohibits the Speaker entertaining a request for unanimous consent to give anyone the privileges of the floor.

The SPEAKER. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. MANN. That is all the rule forbids. The Speaker has authority to admit anyone to the floor when the House is not in session. The House can take a recess for any length of time it pleases.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if it is not the purpose to have these addresses delivered on the floor of the House?

Mr. NOLAN. That is the purpose; yes.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the rule read so that all Members may have their attention called to it.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXIII.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

1. The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, viz: The President and Vice President of the United States and their private secretaries, judges of the Supreme Court, Members of Congress and Members elect, contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House, the Secretary and Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, heads of departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the Librarian of Congress and his assistant in charge of the Law Library, the Resident Commissioner to the United States from Porto Rico, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-Members of the House of Representatives who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress, and clerks of committees when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule or to present from the chair the request of any Member for unanimous consent.

2. There shall be excluded at all times from the Hall of the House of Representatives and the cloakrooms all persons not entitled to the privilege of the floor during the session, except that until 15 minutes of the hour of the meeting of the House persons employed in its service, accredited members of the press entitled to admission to the press gallery, and other persons on request of Members, by card or in writing, may be admitted.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, December 15, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting twenty-ninth annual report (H. Doc. No. 21); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Librarian of Congress, transmitting annual report of the Superintendent of the Library Building and Grounds for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 34); to the Committee on the Library.

7. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules and list of papers, documents, etc., on file in this department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest (H. Doc. No. 363); to the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of the proceeds of all sales of old material, condemned stores, supplies, and other public property for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 364); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting list of congressional cases dismissed by the court May 13, 1914, for want of prosecution (H. Doc. No. 365); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of cases referred to this court by the House of Representatives, which cases were dismissed on orders filed by the court (H. Doc. No. 366); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of cases dismissed by the court on October 12, 1914, for want of prosecution (H. Doc. No. 367); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

12. A letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting statement of the number of typewriters purchased and exchanged and the cost, etc., for the fiscal year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 368); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

13. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting letter from the Chief of Engineers, with copies of report on preliminary examination and survey of harbor at Fort Henry, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 369); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

14. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with copies of reports on preliminary examination and survey, respectively, of West Chester Creek, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 370); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

15. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a letter from surgeon in chief of the Freedmen's Hospital, transmitting detailed statement of receipts and expenditures on account of pay patients for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 371); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

16. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a letter from the surgeon in chief of Freedmen's Hospital, transmitting detailed statements for professional and other services for fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 372); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

17. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report by the Acting Quartermaster General of the Army of all receipts and expenditures of contingent fund from nonmilitary residents of Fort Monroe, Va., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 373); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

18. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting statement showing the number of typewriting machines exchanged by the War Department during the fiscal year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 374); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

19. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with map, on reexamination of Pultneyville Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 375); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

20. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, copy of a report on preliminary examination for harbor of refuge at Tuxie Island, Conn. (H. Doc. No. 376); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

21. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report, with map, on preliminary examination of Bayou Foures (Foret), Cameron Parish, La. (H. Doc. No. 377); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

22. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports from the Quartermaster General, Surgeon General, Chief of Engineers, Chief of Ordnance, and Chief Signal Officer, United States Army, of typewriters, adding machines, etc., exchanged during the fiscal year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 378); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

23. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting copy of a letter from Superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane submitting financial report, as contemplated in the act of June 4, 1880 (H. 31. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting statement of expenditures, including the expenses of the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service as separate organizations from July 1, 1914, to January 28, 1915, the date of approval of Coast Guard act, together with the expenses of the Coast Guard from the date of creation of said act to June 30, 1915 (H. Doc. No. 387); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

32. A letter from the Postmaster General, transmitting memorandum of allowances granted, payable from the appropriation for unusual conditions, for the fiscal year 1915 (H. Doc. No. 388); to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

33. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting report on building four warships of the type, power, and speed which, in his judgment, based on the knowledge gained from the prevailing war in Europe, are best suited for war on the sea, and also the value and uses in naval warfare of aeroplanes, dirigibles, balloons, and submarines (H. Doc. No. 389); to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

34. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with copies of reports, with maps, on preliminary examination and survey, respectively, of Rondout Harbor, N. Y. (H. Doc. No. 390); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

35. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with a copy of a report, on reexamination of Monroe Harbor, Mich. (H. Doc. No. 391); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

36. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with copies of reports on preliminary examination and survey, respectively, of Kalihi Harbor and Channel, Hawaii (H. Doc. No. 392); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

37. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, together with copies of reports, with map, on preliminary examination and survey, respectively, of Brunswick Harbor, Ga. (H. Doc. No. 393); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

38. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting 1,113 reports of inspections of disbursements and transfer by officers of the Army received in the office of the Inspector General during the past fiscal year; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 15, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God and our Father, in whose infinite wisdom, power, and love the destiny of men and of nations is involved, let Thy blessing descend copiously upon us to illumine our minds and quicken our hearts that we may resist evil and cleave to that which is good, that the work of the hour may be in accordance with Thy plans and the interests of our Republic furthered, and blessing and honor and praise be Thine, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CLERKS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

House resolution 38 (H. Rept. 1).

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Labor, the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings each be allowed a clerk at the rate of $125 per month; that the Committee on Rules be allowed an assistant clerk at the rate of $100 per month; and that the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers be allowed a messenger at the rate of $60 per month during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, the salaries of said clerks, assistant clerk, and messenger to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this provides for the same clerks to committees on expenditures that were provided for in the resolution adopted in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. My comparison of the resolutions discloses that they are identically the same with the exception of the number of the Congress.

Mr. LLOYD. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JANITORS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 39 (H. Rept. 2).

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, authorized to appoint two janitors for committees located in the Capitol, at the rate of $60 per month each, and an attendant for the ladies' reception room of the House at the rate of $75 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, during the sessions of the Sixty-fourth Congress, beginning on the 6th day of December, 1915.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this provides for the same employees that were provided for in the last Congress.

Mr. MANN. It was provided in the last Congress by two distinct resolutions.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The lady in charge of the ladies' reception room, is that the one out here or the one upstairs?

Mr. LLOYD. The one out here.

Mr. MANN. There is one who thinks she ought to be a permanent employee. Is that this one?

Mr. LLOYD. This is the one.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

ASSIGNMENT OF CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 40 (H. Rept. 3).

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, be, and they are hereby, assigned for the present session of Congress to the following committees, to wit:

Committee on Education.
Committee on Mines and Mining.
Committee on Railways and Canals.
Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.
Committee on Invalid Pensions (assistant clerk).
Committee on the Judiciary (additional assistant clerk).
Committee on Enrolled Bills.
Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the reason the gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution, I take it, is because the employees are not paid out of the contingent fund?

Mr. LLOYD. That is true.

Mr. MANN. This, according to my comparison, is identical with the resolution which we passed in the last Congress.

Mr. LLOYD. It is identically the same resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 60.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands, or such subcommittee as may be designated, may be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Sixty-fourth Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. Did the committee have the authority to sit during the recess of the last Congress?

Mr. FERRIS. I am not sure about that. My impression is that it did. The members of the Public Lands Committee are almost all western Members, and we took a poll this morning, and only two or three are going home, and I thought we might get a good deal of work out of the way if we had permission to sit during the recess.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean by "recess" the holiday recess?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is not strictly a recess. This would cover the long period between the sessions, if this session does not reach into the next session, as I think it will.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

POST OFFICE COMMITTEE—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF HOUSE.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 59.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or such subcommittees as may be designated, shall have leave to sit during the sessions of the House during the Sixty-fourth Congress and during the recesses of that Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

AERONAUTICS (H. DOC. NO. 402).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, the report of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the period from March 3, 1915, to June 30, 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, exclusive of the accompanying documents, ordered printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, is that where that message should properly go?

The SPEAKER. It is in response to an appropriation or item that was contained in the last naval appropriation bill. The Chair does not know really who has charge of the matter.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire whether the report is made by the War Department or by the Navy Department?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Virginia, who knows as much about it as anyone else, who has charge of the matter of flying machines?

Mr. HAY. The Committee on Military Affairs has had charge of the question of aeronautics so far as it applies to the Army, and the Committee on Naval Affairs has had charge of it so far as it applies to the Navy. It depends on what department made this report.

The SPEAKER. It seems to be a report from a joint committee. Gen. Scriven is the chairman of it and Naval Constructor Richardson is the secretary.

Mr. HAY. As I stated, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs has had charge of aviation so far as it applies to the Army, and the Committee on Naval Affairs has had charge of it so far as it applies to the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Post Office has had charge of aviation in the Post Office Department. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAY. But the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads has not got very far with it, while we have.

The SPEAKER. Who has had most to do with these matters?

Mr. HAY. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that by unanimous consent so much of the report as relates to aviation in the Navy be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and so much as refers to aviation in the Army be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Perhaps the general proposition should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that he move to refer the matter to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to refer the report to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will that prevent it from going to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The SPEAKER. If it goes to the Committee on Military Affairs it can not go to the other committee, unless the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] be adopted that it be parceled out.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I move that that part of it which refers to aviation in the Navy be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and that part of it which refers to aviation in the Army be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It can be printed separately, can it not, for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer that as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. HAY. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker; I think that is all right.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] that the report be parceled out between the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 401).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department and, exclusive of the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a statement by the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, of appropriations, expenditures, and balances of appropriations under the Department of State for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1915.

COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS (H. DOC. NO. 403).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Commission of Fine Arts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, with accompanying illustrations.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1915.

The SPEAKER. It will be referred to the Committee on the Library and, with the exception of the accompanying documents, ordered printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does that carry the illustrations?

The SPEAKER. No; it just orders the message printed, and if the Committee on the Library desires the documents printed, together with the illustrations, it can so report.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, if the Committee on the Library wants to have these illustrations printed, will that come out of their regular appropriation or will it have to be paid out of the congressional printing appropriation?

The SPEAKER. If the House wants these documents printed with the illustrations, it can say so, and the Chair will order it done. I think they had better go without printing until the committee finds out what it wants.

Mr. BARNHART. If the proposition is to print the illustrations, would it not be better, at least, to refer it to some committee, to see whether or not it is necessary to print them?

Mr. MANN. Under the law they can only be printed by order of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This order may carry it.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no. The Speaker stated that it would not carry it.

Mr. BARNHART. Would not the order of the Speaker have that effect?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker ordered the message referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered the message printed, but specifically excepted the documents from being printed.

Mr. BARNHART. That is enough.

ACTS AND RESOLUTIONS, LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 20).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following letter from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 31 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Eighth Legislative Assembly of Porto Rico during its first session (Jan. 11 to Mar. 11, 1915, inclusive).

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress, and none of them has been printed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed, but the accompanying documents are not ordered to be printed.

LAWS, THIRD PHILIPPINE LEGISLATURE (S. DOC. NO. 21).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith a set of the laws enacted by the Third Philippine Legislature during its third session, from October 16, 1914, to February 5, 1915, inclusive, together with certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

These acts and resolutions have not been previously transmitted to Congress, and none of them has been printed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed, but the documents are not ordered printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, ought not these laws to be printed? They always have been. These accompanying documents are composed of legislative action on laws passed by the legislative assembly and ought to be printed.

Mr. BARNHART. These departments have an appropriation to do that printing, have they not?

Mr. MANN. Well, that may be; I do not know. We have ordered them printed heretofore.

Mr. BARNHART. I notice the tendency in all of these reports—it seems to be concerted—to require them to be printed, evidently at the expense of Congress.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they care so much, but Members of the House want to know what goes on. It is for legislative information mainly.

Mr. BARNHART. I want to submit to the gentleman if it would not be proper to permit it to go to a committee and let them decide whether it should be printed or not?

Mr. MANN. I do not know; I have no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. A matter comes up like this and nobody knows what they contain. We see nothing but great bundles of papers——

Mr. MANN. We know what it contains. These are acts passed by the Philippine Assembly. I presume the gentleman has examined carefully the acts passed and printed in the last Congress——

Mr. BARNHART. He has not.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he is very careful about such things. I know I did, and many others in the House did.

Mr. BARNHART. All of them?

The SPEAKER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. I would like to have them printed, but they will be printed eventually.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the Chair will order them printed. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

REPORT OF PHILIPPINE COMMISSION, ETC. (S. DOC. NO. 23).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the Report of the Philippine Commission for the period July 1, 1913, to December 31, 1914, together with the reports of the Governor General and the secretaries of the four executive departments of the Philippine government for the same period, and the first annual report of the governor of the department of Mindanao and Sulu for the calendar year 1914.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed, but the documents are not ordered to be printed.

FRANCHISES GRANTED BY THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 19).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 32 of the act of Congress approved April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copies of franchises granted by the Executive Council of Porto Rico, which are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War transmitting them to me.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed, but the documents are not ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, we provided by the act of Congress that franchises granted by the Porto Rican Legislature should be reported to the President and transmitted to Congress. They mean nothing at all unless those matters are made public. I do not think the expense of printing them will be great, but if we are to keep any control of the question of franchises granted by these various legislative bodies in the insular possessions, I think they ought to be printed so that Members may see what is being done there. I hope this will be done.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the documents are ordered printed. The Chair is of the opinion that it is better to let these committees take them and decide what they wish printed. Unless there is objection, these will be ordered printed.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, that was my suggestion at the opening of this proposition, namely, that these papers be referred to the committees and that they should decide, or at least agree, as to what ought to be done and report that decision or agreement back to the House if necessary.

Mr. MANN. In matters of this kind, where Congress has taken certain action for the purpose of guarding against improper granting of franchises, the members of the committee may look at the character of documents, but unless those documents are printed they can not examine them, as a matter of fact. These franchises granted in Porto Rico are of interest to the people of the United States in municipalities where they grant franchises.

Mr. BARNHART. Would not the committee to which it was referred decide as to that which was of public interest?

Mr. MANN. Very likely; but we have the same authority to decide it as the committee has. We know it is of public interest.

Mr. BARNHART. But the committees have better facilities for ascertaining.

Mr. MANN. It would probably be a problem. They would not ever see those copies. They might have them printed as a committee document. They might come to the House and ask to have them printed as a House document, and that would simply double the expense.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, they will be ordered printed.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 22).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the governor of Porto Rico for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, together with the reports of the heads of the several executive departments of the Porto Rican government for the same period.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed, but the book containing the report, which accompanies the message, is already in type at the War Department. So, without objection, it will not be ordered printed again.

THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT, UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 30).

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, the Thirty-second Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 14, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and the message and the documents ordered printed, because the documents have never been printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the documents should not be printed. The Civil Service Commission has an allotment for printing and should print their annual report out of it. I suggest that they print their own reports and not have Congress do it.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered printed without the documents.

TYPEWRITING MACHINES FOR STATE DEPARTMENT (H. DOC. NO. 400).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I inclose herewith a statement submitted by the Secretary of State in compliance with the provisions of section 4 of the legislative act approved July 16, 1914, of typewriting machines purchased and exchanged during the fiscal year 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 14, 1915.

LAWS OF ALASKA (S. DOC. NO. 18).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Territories and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of section 20 of the act of August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative power thereon, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith the session laws of Alaska for 1915, containing the acts, regulations, and memorials of the Second Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, which convened on the 1st day of March, 1915, and adjourned the 29th day of April, 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 13, 1915.

ANNUAL REPORT GOVERNOR OF PANAMA CANAL (H. DOC. NO. 23).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the annual report of the governor of the Panama Canal for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 15, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The message is referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed, without the accompanying documents being printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LEHLBACH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Frederick W. Duncker, H. R. 30276, Sixty-first Congress, third session, H. R. 16007, Sixty-second Congress, third session, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. MAPES, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Gerhard Heyboer, H. R. 12029; Francis M. Gustin, H. R. 20073; Maria A. Taylor, H. R. 20170; John J. Waters, H. R. 12025; Francis Sanderson, H. R. 19875, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GALLAGHER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report (H. Rept. 5) to accompany House joint resolution 59, extending the emergency act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina submits a privileged report to accompany joint resolution 59, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 59) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The report is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that the minority would like a little time in which to file a minority report. Will the gentleman present that report to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. We are going to take it up for consideration to-morrow, but the gentleman can take as much time as he desires with the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to have the report of the committee on the part of the minority filed before the action of the House or afterwards?

Mr. FORDNEY. We will tell you when we get ready.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer House resolution No. 46 (H. Rept. 6), in regard to the distribution of the President's message.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution (H. Res. 46) referring certain portions of the annual message of the President of the United States to committees.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. TRIBBLE and Mr. CRAMTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CRAMTON. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill (H. R. 3636) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as reenacted and amended by the act of February 23, 1909, which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, taken from that Committee and referred to the Committee on Pensions. It is a matter that does not in any way concern the Postal Service. In the last Congress it was before the Committee on Invalid Pensions and was reported by it and passed the House, and I desire to have it go back to that same committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so rereferred.

There was no objection.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TRIBBLE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Georgia rise?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I rise to a question of personal privilege, on which I wish to speak for just a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. TRIBBLE. A document has been sent to my district, purporting to be my record in Congress. It is a misrepresentation of the facts in many instances, and I desire to call attention to a few items in order that I may discredit the whole without taking the time of this House to review the entire document.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] may have 10 minutes on a question of personal affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I shall only take up the last two months of my service, and one date previous, and content myself with the disclosures in these few misrepresentations. March 2, 1915, I am reported as not voting "on the passage of the antitrust bill." As a matter of fact, on March 2 last there was no vote on any question. There was a call of the House. I am recorded "present." See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 2, 1915, which I hold in my hand and read therefrom. As a matter of truth, the antitrust bill was passed October 8, 1914. I was present and voted for it, as is shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, and I offer it for inspection.

February 20, 1915, I am reported by that document as being absent on "roll call of House." As a matter of fact there was no call of the House on that date, but there was a vote on the fortification bill. I was present, as is shown by the RECORD, and I voted "nay" on the fortification bill, as shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date, and I offer it here for inspection. There were only 4 yeas.

January 25 I am reported as being absent on roll call. There was no "call of the House" on that date. There was a record vote, and I am recorded "yea" on the question pending. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 25, 1915. The facts are, this alleged record presents me to my constituents as being absent from the House, when the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows there was no call of the House and also shows that I was present and voting on pending legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I would like to ask whether this misinformation purports to come from any employee of the House?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; this information came from an employee of this House, but I have no desire to injure him. This employee made this alleged record of me and received a large sum of money for doing so; but, knowing this, as I do, my only purpose is to counteract the evil effects of this misinformation and not injure the gentleman who sent it out. If I know myself, I have no desire to cause trouble for any employee though he misrepresents me.

On January 19 I am reported as not being present. The RECORD shows that I was present and so recorded. See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 19, 1915.

On January 4 I am reported as not voting on the passage of a bill providing for the uniform grading of grain. I was present and voted "yea" on the passage of that bill, as shown by the bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, January 4, 1915.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one more item, and then I shall detain the House no further. I am reported on February 27, 1913, as voting "yea" on the following proposition: "On motion to instruct the conferees on the public building bill to agree to the Senate amendment providing that post-office buildings shall not be erected at towns in which the postal receipts are less than $10,000 a year." Mr. Speaker, as a matter of truth——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that in justice to the House, if an employee of this House furnishes to anyone information which is incorrect or unfounded it is due to the House that the gentleman should tell us who that employee is?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I will answer the gentleman as I answered my colleague from Missouri, Mr. RUSSELL. I have no desire in the world to make an attack upon or to injure any employee of this House. I am only defending myself against this alleged record sent to my district, for which a large sum of money was paid.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think the House is entitled to it? And as a Member of the House, does he not think he ought to tell the House what employee is giving that information?

Mr. TRIBBLE. No; I decline to give that information in this public way. I do not desire to injure him.

Mr. Speaker, as to this post-office resolution to which I was directing my attention when my colleague from South Carolina propounded a question, I had in that bill four sites, and there was not a single one of those sites where the receipts amounted to $10,000 a year; and yet I am reported as having voted for the said Senate amendment when the $10,000 issue was squarely drawn.

Mr. Speaker, as the RECORD shows, on that date I was present and voted "nay" instead of "yea." See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, February 27, 1913.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the only purpose I have in rising to-day is to say this: As every Member in this House knows, I am always present and in my place. There is not a Member upon the floor of this House who can challenge that statement. I do not claim to have any superior record as to attendance on the floor of this House. I do not claim that; but I do claim that there is not a man on the floor of this House who has attended more, and been more in his place, and has been more attentive to his duties than I have been; and I do think it is unfair for such a report as this to be sent to my district, and I do not propose to sit quietly and not defend myself against it. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Rhode Island rise?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I decline to answer further questions about the name of the employee.

Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for Members to have every vote recorded and every call of the House show the Member present. There are 435 Members, and often the confusion is great while the roll is being called and difficult for the Clerk to correctly record all the Members. Often there are several Members who rise on the day following the passage of an important bill and have the RECORD corrected when improperly recorded. Furthermore, there are times when of necessity a Member must be absent. December last I made three trips to Georgia on account of serious illness in my family. I traveled at night as much as possible so as to be present when I could.

Since I was elected to Congress I have given my entire time to the people I represent. I have not practiced my profession of law or engaged in any kind of business. I have spent thousands of dollars of my own money sending my record, literature, publications, and various things to the district. When Congress was not in session during the present year my full time was given to the district, lecturing on national questions and presenting picture views of interest. I would not have made this personal reference, but owing to this effort to show me unfaithful to duty, I feel called upon to give the facts.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the person in my district desiring to assail my record for political purposes could have personally and fairly investigated my public record, which is open to all men for inspection. Why employ a person unknown to the people of the eighth congressional district for a monetary consideration? There are thousands of Georgians who could have given a correct transcript of my record, and many hundreds of deserving Georgians in Washington. And if a person in Washington is supposed to know more about the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD than those not residing there, then why not let one of these Georgians furnish a correct record? I invite any man and all men to investigate my record. It is open to all. My reason for making these remarks is that I have worked so hard to make a good record and good name and I would not be fair to myself, my children, and my district should I sit quietly by and see it misrepresented.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. To propound a unanimous request. I ask unanimous consent that I may have the right of extending in the RECORD a letter received by me some months ago from the American Truth Society and my response thereto.

Mr. BARNHART. What society?

Mr. RAKER. The American Truth Society.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the American Truth Society and his reply thereto. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. What is the nature of the letter?

Mr. RAKER. The nature of the letter is that they wanted a statement in advance from me as to how I intended to vote upon national questions, and that if I refused to answer them they would publish me broadcast over the country and send men into my district in the next campaign to defeat me unless I complied with their request.

Mr. SABATH. That is impossible.

Mr. BARNHART. I suppose every Member of the House got the same thing.

Mr. RAKER. I should like to have my constituents know where I stand on that matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will call the committees.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER, ARK.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is reported to this House, but not yet printed, a bill (H. R. 3638) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark. I ask unanimous consent that the printing be dispensed with, as the bill is in the usual form and recommended by the War Department, and that the bill be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which he names, notwithstanding the rule about printing. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, let it be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let us hear the bill read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I will reserve the right to object until I hear the bill read.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will ask the Clerk to read the substitute reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the substitute.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by act of Congress approved October 22, 1914, to be built across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark., by the county of Clay, Ark., and the county of Dunklin, Mo., is hereby extended one year and three years, respectively, from date of approval of this act.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. MANN. That seems to be in the usual form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the rule?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the chairman of the committee would tell us why an extension of time is desired for the construction of this bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I will get the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. CARAWAY. The reason is that the finances of the county would not permit them to incur the expense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That permits me to ask a question that I think ought always to be answered in these cases: Who wants this bridge built? Is it a county bridge or a railroad bridge?

Mr. CARAWAY. It is to be a free wagon bridge, to be built by the two counties, one in Arkansas and one in Missouri.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are not ready to commence building?

Mr. CARAWAY. They are now. They were not at the time of the expiration of the limit fixed in the former bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has any work been done upon the bridge?

Mr. CARAWAY. None whatever.

Mr. ADAMSON. I call attention to the fact that what was read by the Clerk is a substitute for the original bill. The original bill was identical with the old bill. The committee, on recommendation of the War Department, suggested the form which has been read as an extension of the old bill rather than a duplication. The first question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

By unanimous consent, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is another bill, introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY], about which I make the same request, that it be considered, notwithstanding it has not been printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report, notwithstanding the rule to the contrary.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 663) granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Citizens' Bridge Co. and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Burlington, Iowa, in the county of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, we are usually pretty careful about bridges across the Mississippi River. Has this bill been to the War Department and been reported upon by that department?

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, yes; there is a favorable report from the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Stating that this will preserve the interests of navigation?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is favorably reported by the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, may I ask if there is any opposition by anyone or any locality to the construction of this bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. I have never heard of any, but I will ask the gentleman from Iowa to tell the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. There is absolutely no objection to it. This is a municipal proposition. The city of Burlington will pay for the construction of the bridge, and there is no opposition of any sort.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The Clerk continued the call of committees.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further call of committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further call of committees.

Mr. HAY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask if the further call of the committees is dispensed with will the call rest with the last committee called?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HAY. Then I object. Let the committees be called through.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia objects.

The Clerk proceeded with and completed the call of committees.

POSTAL SAVINGS.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up House bill 562, and the report thereon, to increase postal savings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take up House bill 562.

Mr. MANN. I think the better way would be to ask unanimous consent to return to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MOON. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to return to the call of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take up House bill 562, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], who is on the committee, desires a little further time to look into it, and I therefore withdraw my request.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 61.

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

PREPAREDNESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to the Members of the House for this opportunity to address the House on the subject of "Preparedness." I am speaking by unanimous consent, which means that if any gentleman had objected to my having this opportunity I could not have spoken to-day.

I believe that the House has started in on this question of preparedness in the right way in permitting any Member of this House who has ideas on the subject which he desires to present to express them, whether he is on the side of those who think that if we do not greatly increase our Army and Navy appropriations the Republic will be destroyed from without, or whether he is on the side of those who think that if the appropriations are greatly increased, as desired, we will ultimately destroy the Republic from within. Let all the facts come out; let the people hear fully the arguments on both sides of this question.

I hope and believe that if such a course is taken, when the House finally does settle this proposition, it will settle it in the interest of the American people. [Applause.]

I think we are doing right in approaching this proposition from the viewpoint of nonpartisanship, and I think we ought also to approach it not from the viewpoint of preparing for war, but to resist invasion.

In the first place, I think we ought to consider carefully all the lessons that have been taught us by the European war. According to both French and British authorities the present European war in the first year cost $46,000,000,000, including the value of property destroyed. Forty-six billion dollars is four times all the coin in the world. Twenty-one million men are under arms in Europe to-day, and in the first year, according to the estimates published in the newspapers, 2,000,000 men were killed and 5,000,000 wounded.

But the particular point to which I wish to direct the attention of the House is that although war and preparation for war mean an increased burden of taxes for everyone, and suffering and misery on every hand, it spells stupendous profits to a very few gentlemen, but which few gentlemen are so resourceful and wield so much power in this country that their great profit because of war becomes a menace to peace and therefore to all mankind.

I wish to read to the House from a weekly stock-market letter of a New York stock brokerage firm as to the extent of these profits. This is the stock-market letter of the firm of Gilbert & Elliott Co., of New York. I will not read the full circular but only the headlines. It is dated August 28, 1915. It says:

Winchester arms up 1,000 points. Colt arms up 100 points. Electric boat up 100 points. Canadian explosives up 50 points. Du Pont declares stock dividend of 200 per cent.

This is the stock-market report. Now, Bethlehem Steel stock at the outbreak of the war could have been bought for $40 and as low as $30. Yesterday Bethlehem Steel stock sold for $474. In other words, if you had had an investment of $40 in a share of Bethlehem Steel at the beginning of the war, your profit because of war would have been $434. By this we may obtain some idea as to the staggering profits that accrued to the Wall Street war trust magnates who owned millions and millions of dollars worth of munition stocks.

It is not to the financial interest of these men that the European war shall be brought to a speedy close, but that it shall not be brought to a speedy close. It is not to their financial interest that the United States of America shall not become involved in the European war, but that it shall become involved. In one of these stock-market letters it was stated that should the United States become involved in the European war this stock would be worth even double its present value, and it held out the hope that there was a pretty good chance of the United States becoming involved. What I am advocating is that the Government take private profit out of war and preparation for war, so that war will be no more profitable, and therefore no more attractive, to the J. P. Morgans and the other directors of the war trafficking firms than it is to the rest of mankind. I assert that war is altogether too profitable to these few men to be healthy for the rest of us.

To read the large city newspapers one would think that the United States of America has steadily neglected its Army and Navy and that Congress has been very stingy in making appropriations. The truth is that the United States Government has increased its appropriations for war and on account of war faster than any nation on earth has ever increased such appropriations in time of peace. In the last 10 years we have spent for war and on account of war $2,000,000,000—enough to pay off the national debt, dig the Panama Canal, and pay the expense of every church and every school in the United States for an entire year. And of every $100 that we have collected from the American people we have paid $67 out for war and on account of war, and a very large slice of the money that we have appropriated for the Army and Navy has gone to four firms, which up to this time have had a monopoly of the manufacture of armor plate and powder.

Four firms since 1887 have drawn down contracts from the United States Government aggregating about $200,000,000, and I assert that on the average we have paid from 20 to 60 per cent more for these materials than they could have been manufactured for in the Government arsenals and navy yards.

I want to call attention to this fact: These $2,000,000,000 have been contributed not by the rich, but largely by the poor, and I am going to try to make that plain if I can.

Before I can do so I must correct the impression that exists in the mind of the average man that some part of the taxes that he pays his local tax collector is used for defraying the expenses of the National Government, and that if he pays $20 to his local tax collector two or three dollars of it are sent on to Washington to maintain the expenses of the Government and to maintain the Army and the Navy. Local taxes are used exclusively for local township, city, county, and State expenses. The truth is that not a penny of the money that the average citizen pays the local tax collector comes to Washington to be used toward maintaining the Army and the Navy. Where, then, did this $2,000,000,000 come from? It was not picked up out of the streets.

It was raised through two sources; through the internal-revenue offices, where a tax is levied principally upon liquors and tobaccos, and where now we are levying a tax upon incomes, which raises, however, only 9 per cent of the total revenues. The other source from which we are raising the money to maintain the Army and the Navy is the customs tax on the things that the people eat, wear, and use. So the people are paying the cost of the maintenance of the Army and the Navy in the form of the increased cost of living; that is, they pay the tax when they do not know it, and the local merchant collects the tax without knowing that he is really a collector for the Government.

Is it not obvious that since we raise this money almost wholly by taxing the things that the people eat, wear, and use that the more money we spend for the Army and the Navy the higher the cost of living must be? The fact is that the cost of living has been increasing just about in proportion to the increase in the cost of the Army and Navy, and it is bound to continue to do that unless we change our present system of taxation. So I believe that the greatest menace in this proposal to greatly increase the appropriations for the Army and Navy is that it will add burdens upon the taxpayers of this country in the form of increased cost of living.

Already, on the average, for every year since 1897, the cost of living has been going up much faster than the increase in wages. If it continues to do that, and if we increase greatly the appropriations for the Army and the Navy, there is going to come a time when, the cost of living increasing year after year faster than wages, the average working man in this country will be unable to support his family. It is an arithmetical proposition; you can figure it out with pencil and paper. I consider that such a condition as I have described would be a greater danger to this Republic than any danger from abroad.

I believe that if this Republic is in danger, it is in danger not from the peoples beyond the seas, but from a clique of men within this country who would tax the people until their backs break, simply that they might make profit supplying battleships, armor, and guns.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. I have so much material here that it is going to take all of my time to present it, and I prefer not to yield.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield for a moment for a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. Very well.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The gentleman is speaking of additional taxation to be placed on the people on account of the expenditure for the Army and Navy. He has introduced into this Congress five bills, which, if enacted into law, would add an additional expenditure of $1,165,000, with respect to the Rock Island Arsenal in his own district.

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. May I ask him in that connection if the War Department or the General Staff has asked for any of this or whether it has been recommended in any report?

Mr. TAVENNER. No. I will answer that by saying that the War Department would rather give contracts to the J. P. Morgan controlled war trust, although at the Rock Island Arsenal we have manufactured certain materials 54 per cent cheaper than the prices we were paying the private manufacturers. If you were going to buy $20,000,000 worth of an article, would you pay 54 per cent more for that article than you could manufacture it for yourself?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I have risen to ask the gentleman a question, and I will answer that in my own time. I would like to say this, that the statement he has made about the War Department is absolutely unfounded on the facts. It is all right for home consumption, but it will not go throughout the country at large. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAVENNER. Two hundred and forty million dollars, raised by taxing the American people, have annually been expended on the Army and Navy under the general assumption that in return for this colossal expenditure the Nation was being reasonably "prepared." But it is now asserted, even by men occupying high and authoritative places in public life and in a position to know what they are talking about, that our country is "pitifully and hopelessly unprepared" and that "if war were to break out to-day it would be found that our coast defenses have not sufficient ammunition for an hour's fight." Surely to any thinking person this state of affairs must suggest an indictment of the policy of giving the bulk of Army and Navy contracts to private munition and shipbuilding concerns. If we are not prepared as we should be, it is not because the people have not paid in taxes the price of adequate preparation, but because too much of the money appropriated for preparedness has gone into the pockets of the stockholders of the war trafficking firms, some of which stockholders are men occupying high positions in official life.

At least a hint as to what has become of the staggering sums appropriated for preparedness is to be found in the fact that four firms which have enjoyed practically a monopoly of the large Army and Navy contracts have received since 1887 orders aggregating $200,000,000, and have been paid for their wares from 20 to 60 per cent more than the same could have been manufactured for in Government arsenals and navy yards.

It is possible to give definite and specific information as to the economy of Government manufacture. The War Department in 1913 purchased 7,000 4.7-inch shrapnel from the ammunition ring, paying $25.26 each therefor. At the same time precisely the same article was being manufactured in a Government plant at a cost of $15.45. The War Department paid the ring $17.50 for a 3.8-inch common shrapnel, when it can manufacture the identical article for $7.94. The Government has manufactured at the Rock Island Arsenal caissons for gun carriages at a cost of $1,128.67, for which private manufacturers had been paid $1,744.10, which is 54.6 per cent greater than the arsenal cost. Take powder. The Government has purchased $25,000,000 worth of powder from the Powder Trust since 1905, paying therefor all the way from 53 cents to 80 cents per pound. We are manufacturing powder in Government plants for 34 cents per pound, and the officers in charge state that the more we manufacture the cheaper we can produce it. A hundred similar illustrations could be cited if time permitted.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Where are these ammunition materials being manufactured? Is it not a fact they are mostly manufactured in the State of the gentleman who interrupted the gentleman from Illinois a moment ago—in the State of Delaware? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAVENNER. Of course, it is not "pork" when it goes to the Morgan-controlled war trust.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAVENNER. I can not yield to the gentleman. I am anxious for the gentleman to have an hour or any other amount of time he desires to answer me in his own time.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I should like to reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. CALDWELL. May I ask the gentleman if the arsenal costs include the overhead charges?

Mr. TAVENNER. All overhead charges are included—even some that should not be charged. Of course, it is a very strange thing, but the Army officers do not want it to appear that they are manufacturing things too cheaply at the Government arsenals, because they want to give as much business as possible to private manufacturers.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAVENNER. I can not yield any more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAVENNER. The illustrations given of the economy of Government manufacture are not exceptions, but the general rule, as may be shown by the fact that on a contract covering a wide variety of war materials, valued at $1,900,064, the Government saved, by doing the work itself, $979,840; or, in other words, the Government saved approximately $1,000,000 on a $2,000,000 contract, as compared with what it would cost had that order been given the private contractors.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels in his annual report for 1914 called attention to the economy of Government manufacture by saying that, "contrary to popular idea, the Navy Department in what it manufactures does so, from a superdreadnaught to a gallon of paint or a pound of powder, cheaper than the same can be purchased. This is particularly true of the most expensive instruments of war, but it is equally true of gasoline engines, electrical supplies, engines for dreadnaughts, shrapnel, clothing for marines and sailors, accouterments, and a multitude of other articles required for the fleet and shore stations."

Government manufacture will mean that the workmen who perform the labor of actually making the munitions will receive higher wages and better working conditions than if the contracts for war materials are awarded the private munition firms, among which are numbered the most bitter enemies of organized labor in the United States.

Right at this point I want to read something from the report of an official Government investigation as to the working conditions at one of the plants receiving a large part of the Government business—the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Thanks to an investigation of the Bethlehem Steel Co.'s strike in 1910, information is available as to conditions of labor in that armor-making concern's plants.

The inquiry was made by the United States Bureau of Labor in 1910, under the direction of Ethelbert Stewart, a special agent of the Labor Bureau at the time, who bore the reputation of being one of the most experienced economic investigators in the country.

When this strike began there were no labor organizations in the plant; the company would not permit them. It was the higher-grade workers who led off in the strike. Many of the highest-grade men had approximately a 10½-hour day; but they were frequently being required to work overtime on weekdays and to do additional work on Sundays. Fearing that the encroachments of overtime and Sunday work were leading to a 12-hour and 7-day schedule for the whole force, they therefore protested. Therefore the protesting committee was discharged; therefore the strike.

The Government investigation revealed this:

That out of every 100 men 29 were working 7 days every week.

That out of every 100 men 43, including these 29, were working some Sundays in the month.

That out of every 100 men 51 were working 12 hours a day.

That out of every 100 men 25 were working 12 hours a day 7 days a week.

That out of every 100 men 46 were earning less than $2 a day.

These are the grim figures which the United States Bureau of Labor gives us of the working shifts of the Bethlehem Steel Co. as drawn from the company's own time books. This is the manner in which the concerns that have drawn down $175,000,000 of the people's money were treating their employees in 1910. Since that time considerable 8-hour-day legislation has been passed, and there is no record of the number of 12-hour shifts now in force.

Workingmen of the Nation, are you willing that your Government shall continue to give contracts running into millions annually to firms that have mistreated and underpaid their employees as have these great war-trafficking concerns? If you are not willing, then protest against it. But let me assure you at the outset that one protest will not be sufficient. The chances are you will have to speak loud and often before your voice will be heard in far-off Washington.

DEMAND FOR GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE IS GROWING.

Practically all of the peace societies of the world which do not have on their boards of directors or in their memberships stockholders in the private war-trafficking firms, have declared in favor of the nationalization of the manufacture of munitions of war, on the theory that if private profit and private graft are taken out of militarism the incentive for at least that portion of the systematic agitation for increased military appropriations inaugurated by those who directly or indirectly profit from the sale of war materials will have been removed and an important step taken in the direction of peace. Government manufacture of war materials was also indorsed by the American Federation of Labor at its convention in Philadelphia in 1914.

Nationalization of the manufacture of war paraphernalia offers a program on which all save those directly or indirectly interested in private war-trafficking concerns may unite. Whether in favor of disarmament, vastly increased armament, or maintaining the present armament, all can meet on a common ground. Those who desire a greater armament can obtain it through Government manufacture without placing increased burdens upon the taxpayers.

If those who demand such a large Army and Navy are wholly sincere, and if their only desire is that we shall have the strongest possible Army and Navy, why should they not want us to obtain the maximum defensive power or the maximum striking power for every dollar we appropriate, instead of only about 65 cents worth of fighting strength for every dollar appropriated?

By manufacturing armor, munitions, submarines, aeroplanes, and so forth, in its own plants the Government will be able to keep for its own use any improvements in such vehicles of war. Under the present policy of giving the major part of military contracts to private concerns it has been impossible to do this. "Even now," says Secretary of the Navy Daniels, "the improvements in armor and the designs worked out by the Navy have been embodied in the warship of another nation recently finished by the Bethlehem Steel Co. and put into commission. This is not an argument lightly to be disregarded in favor of a Government armor plant, nor has it been overlooked, for instance, by Japan, which has erected its own armor-making plant and surrounded it with such secrecy that none of the other nations is able to tell whether or not at this minute the Japanese armor may not be superior to any other in existence."

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I must refuse to yield. Under the present system the Government is at the mercy of a few concerns having a monopoly of the manufacture of the materials of war, who appear to have a gentlemen's agreement to divide the Government contracts between themselves and between whom there is no competition worthy of the name. "I do not see how it is possible for Congress to justify to the people a refusal to erect a Government plant," said Secretary Daniels to Congress, "nor how it can answer the charge that will invariably be brought up—that the same mysterious providence which saved this profitable business to the steel companies three times in the past, even after money for a Government plant had actually been appropriated, is not still at work exercising its beneficent protection over these lusty specimens of infant industries, who are even now under Government investigation as violators of the antitrust law."

It is argued by some who oppose Government manufacture as a policy that the Government should give to private manufacturers contracts in time of peace in order that they may be relied upon for patriotic cooperation in time of war.

But what are the facts? When war with Spain was imminent the three concerns in this country which have a monopoly of the manufacture of armor plate got together and practically issued an ultimatum to their own Government, the United States Government, that they would not manufacture a single piece of armor plate unless we should agree to pay them $100 a ton more than the price fixed by Congress after an investigation as to a fair price. But their patriotism did not prevent them from selling armor plate to the Russian Government for $249 a ton while they were asking of their own Government $616 a ton. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen.

Mr. TAVENNER. The present European war has demonstrated that private plants not in the business of manufacturing war materials, can make the necessary alterations to manufacture such supplies in a remarkably short space of time. By enlarging the Government plants and operating them in time of peace, the Government could have on hand sufficient ammunition, guns, and so forth, to equip the most powerful army ever organized and keep it in the field a long time after private plants, not engaged in the manufacture of war materials, would have been able to reorganize their shops and be turning out ammunition and other supplies. In the event that private manufacturers should not respond to the necessity of the occasion, the Government could itself take over such industrial plants as it might need just as England has done.

Now, I want to go a little further into the patriotism of some of the firms that have a monopoly of the manufacture of war materials in this country and to take up particularly the singleness of the patriotism of the Du Pont Powder Co.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TAVENNER. I refuse to yield.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman passes from that point——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TILSON. I am trying to ask that the gentleman's time be extended——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois refuses to yield, and the gentleman from Connecticut will take his seat and be in order.

Mr. TAVENNER. The policy of taking profit out of war and preparation for war, by having the Government manufacture its own battleships, armor, ammunition, and so forth, is a nonpartisan proposition, and there are a number of Republican Members working for Government manufacture, just as there are Democrats. The American people are under the greatest debt of gratitude to the Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, who is the first Secretary of the Navy I can find any trace of who has refused to allow the armor-plate makers to put their hands in the United States Treasury and help themselves almost at will. Also the country is indebted to Mr. HAY, of Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the last Congress the Army appropriation bill, for the first time in the history of the Government, provided that practically 90 per cent of the money appropriated in that bill should be expended for the manufacture of munitions of war in Government plants. The country's gratitude is also due to Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, who put a similar provision in the sundry civil bill making appropriations for powder and field artillery materials of various kinds.

As to the Du Pont powder trust, it has practically always had a monopoly of the sale of powder to the Government of the United States. They themselves claim that they have been selling powder to the United States Government ever since the Civil War. I want to show you how patriotic the Du Pont powder trust has been in the past to the Government of the United States, and what I will read is from the records of the circuit court of the United States. I sent over to the Congressional Library and got the official records of the circuit court of the United States, showing evidence used by the Government in its suit against the Du Pont powder trust.

For a great many years, until the Government began to erect its own factories, the Du Pont Co. had the Government wholly at its mercy. That was the situation, unless the United States Government should have sent abroad in order to buy its powder. So what the Du Pont Co. did was to go into an agreement with foreign manufacturers by which it was agreed that if the United States Government should try to buy powder from the powder concerns of one of the foreign countries, the powder makers in that country were bound by the terms of this agreement to first write to the Du Pont Powder Co. in this country and find out what price the Du Ponts had submitted. Then they were bound not to submit any lower price. And if one of the foreign Governments should try to escape from their local Powder Trust and write to the Du Ponts, the Du Ponts were bound first to write to the Powder Trusts in those countries and find what bid they had put in, and not submit a lower one.

Now, I am going to read to you from this contract which was placed in the records of the Supreme Court. I will not ask you to take my word for it, but the words of the contract itself.

Here are two paragraphs in the world agreement entered into in 1897, which agreement was used by the Government in its suit against the Du Pont trust:

Whenever the American factories receive an inquiry for any Government other than their own, either directly or indirectly, they are to communicate with the European factories through the chairman appointed, as hereinafter set forth, and by that means to ascertain the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed, and they shall be bound not to quote or sell at any lower figure than the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed. Should the European factories receive an inquiry from the Government of the United States of North America or decide to quote for delivery for that Government, either directly or indirectly, they shall first in like manner ascertain the price quoted or fixed by the American factories and shall be bound not to quote or sell below that figure.

* * * * * * *

The American factories are to abstain from manufacturing, selling, or quoting, directly or indirectly, in or for consumption in any of the European territory, and the Europeans are to abstain in like manner from manufacturing, selling, or quoting, directly or indirectly, in or for consumption in any of the countries of the American territory. With regard to the syndicated territory, neither party is to erect works there, except by a mutual understanding, and the trade there is to be carried on for joint account in the manner hereinafter defined.

Now, that is bad enough, but that is not the worst. However, I can not find among my notes here the particular thing I allude to as being worse, just now, but I probably will later, and will return to it.

Mr. HARDY. Just give us the substance of it and put it in the RECORD later.

Mr. TAVENNER. It is here somewhere, and I will put it in the RECORD later.

Now, a few words as to the plan which has been submitted to raise the money with which to defray the proposed tremendous increases in appropriations for the Army and Navy.

SHALL PREPAREDNESS BE PAID BY LABOR?

It is proposed to meet the cost of "preparedness" by taxes on sugar, on gasoline, and by other direct taxes which bear heavily upon labor. It is also proposed to continue the present indirect taxes on the things people use, which yield $620,000,000 a year. It is proposed to burden the worker and farmer by taxes on the things they consume, and spend the proceeds on armament, with colossal profits to the armament ring, for an Army and Navy to protect principally the things that privilege owns.

WHY TAX LABOR?

First. Why tax labor when, according to the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, from between one-third and one-fourth of the male workers 18 years of age and over in factories and mines earn less than $10 per week, while from two-thirds to three-fourths earn less than $15 per week; when 2 per cent of the people own 60 per cent of the wealth, and 65 per cent own only 5 per cent of the wealth.

Why not compel 2 per cent of the people to pay 60 per cent of the taxes instead of making the great mass of the people, who own 5 per cent, pay 95 per cent of the taxes?

Second. Why tax labor when war-munition stocks have increased in value in one year by $866,000,000?

Third. Why tax incomes in America but $80,000,000, when incomes in Great Britain, even before the war, paid $236,245,000? England contains less than one-half our population and wealth.

All told, England taxed wealth, incomes, and inheritances to the extent of $380,115,000, and collected 45 per cent of her total revenues from these sources. Democratic America collected 9 per cent of its revenues from wealth, incomes, and inheritances.

Fourth. Why tax labor on its necessities, on the things it needs to merely live, when inheritances have not as yet been taxed a penny by the Federal Government?

Fifth. Great Britain taxes incomes up to 33⅓ per cent for war purposes; Germany levies taxes for imperial purposes, for state purposes, and for municipal purposes as well; the combined rate running often to 15 per cent or 20 per cent. Democratic America taxes incomes from 1 per cent to 7 per cent, the maximum up to $100,000 being but 4 per cent.

A tax of $10 to the wage earner means giving up clothes, food from his table, possibly the doctor for his children. A tax of $10,000 to a man with an income of $100,000, or $100,000 to a man enjoying an income of $500,000 means no sacrifice whatever.

Sixth. Why tax labor, when an additional tax of 1 per cent on the gross earnings of railroads, public-service corporations, mines, and other public utilities would yield $50,000,000. It could be easily collected. It could not be escaped. In most instances it could not be passed on to the consumer.

Seventh. Preparations for war should call for equal sacrifices. Defense should not mean sacrifice for the millions, and only profits for the few. Preparations for war mean profits to the railroads, to mine owners, munition factories, banks; it means speculative values for the stock brokers and speculators. It means that the bended backs of labor will carry the Army and the Navy, which, if the emergency arises, will be used against labor at home and for the protection of over-seas investments abroad.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman care to be interrupted?

Mr. TAVENNER. I prefer not to be, because I wish to go on with my argument. I have some more important material here.

Mr. BORLAND. I just wanted to put in the RECORD at that point the statement that the Democratic Party is sponsor for the income tax.

Mr. TAVENNER. I know it; and certainly it is the greatest thing for the masses that has ever been brought about, and I want to see the tax on incomes in excess of $10,000 greatly increased, and I want to see a tax on inheritances.

Mr. BORLAND. We all agree to take the tax off of labor and put it on inherited wealth.

THE DISINTERESTED PATRIOTISM OF THE NAVY LEAGUE.

Mr. TAVENNER. I believe in giving credit to whom credit is due. For instance, the gentlemen back of the Navy League, in my opinion, deserve full credit for the sentiment that has at last been developed in many quarters of the United States for increased appropriations for the Army and Navy. They deserve full credit for the sentiment that has been aroused in the large manufacturing centers and other parts of the United States for the proposed $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships that the Navy League has been advocating. I am in favor of giving the Navy League full credit and also full responsibility.

On November 19 I made the statement, publicly, that I intended to introduce in Congress a resolution to investigate the Navy League and to require J. P. Morgan, one of the directors of the league, to take the responsibility of testifying under oath as to whether he is interested in war-trafficking firms.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield right there? Is it not a fact that J. P. Morgan, the head of the Morgan banking house of New York as well as the controlling factor in many of these munition plants in this country, is the accredited British agent in all munition matters? And is he not receiving from the British Government 2 per cent commissions on all sales of this kind to the warring nations?

Mr. TAVENNER. He is minister of munitions to the Court of St. James. That is his title. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HENSLEY. The sales of munitions already made, it is said, amount to two billions of dollars, and 2 per cent profits would represent forty millions of profits up to date.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Delaware rise?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I would like to ask just one short question.

Mr. TAVENNER. I refuse to yield.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended one hour, so that he may have opportunity to yield to both sides.

Mr. TAVENNER. After I have finished I will be willing to yield so long as I have time.

Mr. NORTON. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 22 minutes left.

Mr. TAVENNER. In a letter sent to Members of Congress, dated January 13, 1914, A. H. Dadmun, secretary of the Navy League, said:

> Certain Congressmen have insinuated that the league is supported by people who are interested in the sale of war materials to the Navy. They are entirely mistaken.

A. H. Dadmun, the secretary, in a letter dated December 19, 1914, said:

> The Navy League is not supported by sellers of war munitions to the Government, but is supported by membership fees and voluntary contributions.

Mr. Dadmun, in a letter published in the January, 1916, issue of Pearson's Magazine, reiterates that the men back of the Navy League "are men who will not profit by the results of the league's propaganda."

What is this Navy League? Who founded it, and who are its directors? I hold in my hand the bound Navy League Journal for 1904. In the opening number is the statement that this is "the official organ of the Navy League of the United States."

I turn now to page 32 of the issue of February, 1904, where I find a list of 19 men who are named as the "founders" of the Navy League. Now, then, let us see who they are.

I note in the list of founders the name of the Midvale Steel Co. The United States Government since 1903 has bought from the Midvale Steel Co. 48,399 tons of armor, and we have paid for it an average of $420 a ton, or in all $20,375,858 for the single item of armor plate alone, not to say anything about other millions of dollars' worth of contracts that have been given to the Midvale Steel Co. for other things used by the Army and the Navy; and if the Navy League's proposed $500,000,000 bond issue goes through, Midvale will stand to draw down some more millions.

Let us see if there are any more war traffickers here. Is Charles M. Schwab, whom I see listed as one of the founders, a war trafficker? Well, he is president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and we have bought from Bethlehem 95,007 tons of armor at an average rate of $445 a ton, and have paid Bethlehem for armor plate alone $42,344,937. That is the second member of the armor ring.

Now, there is another member of the armor ring, and that is the Carnegie Steel Co. Let us see if we find them also among the founders of the Navy League. Yes; I see here the name of J. P. Morgan. The late J. P. Morgan was the organizer and a director of the United States Steel Corporation, which controls, according to Moody's Manual, the Carnegie Steel Co. We have bought from the Carnegie Steel Co. 89,933 tons of armor plate, paying an average of $442 a ton, or a total of $39,783,497 for the single item of armor plate; and if the Navy League's proposed $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships goes through they will receive still larger contracts. So that you see the three firms which have a monopoly of the manufacture of armor in this country are all founders of the Navy League; they are all represented as the founders of the Navy League, and we have bought from them 233,339 tons of armor plate, paying for it an average of $439 a ton, or a total of $102,504,292.

Mr. FARR. For how long?

Mr. TAVENNER. Since 1887. Remember that figure, $439! There have been 10 official estimates by Government officials as to the cost of armor plate in a Government factory, and the average of those estimates is $251 a ton; and had we manufactured this armor in a Government factory, which the Navy League has cold shouldered, I think I am well within the bounds of conservatism when I say we could have saved to the American taxpayers at the very least $35,000,000.

The Harvey Steel Co., which owned the patent on a process for hardening steel which compelled all manufacturers of armor plate to pay it a royalty, was in on the ground floor at the organization of the Navy League, in the persons of S. S. Palmer, its president, and Benjamin F. Tracy, ex-Secretary of the Navy. Mr. Tracy was the counsel for the Harvey Co. and the Carnegie Steel Co. after leaving the Navy Department. Both Palmer and Tracy were also among the 19 founders. Albert B. Boardman, Mr. Tracy's law partner, whose address at that time was 35 Wall Street, New York, became a contributing member of the Navy League, and James R. Soley, also connected with Mr. Tracy's firm, was induced to enter the Navy League both as an honorary vice president and contributing member.

Throughout the existence of the Navy League there have been several distinct groups represented, made up of officers, directors, attorneys, and employees. The most important of these are the J. P. Morgan group, the Bethlehem Steel group, the Carnegie Steel group, the Midvale Steel group, the Harvey Steel group, and last, but not least, Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co. group. These groups will be found well represented in the league's officers, directorates, contributors, and vice presidents for each and every year since the birth of the Navy League in 1902.

There are 19 men in the list of founders, and of those 19 the majority were connected with concerns and establishments which, through interlocking directorates, connect in turn with manufacturers of war materials and things which go into war materials. I have carefully compiled a list of the directors of the Navy League for every year from the day it was organized down to date. Always a predominant number on the board of directors are war traffickers or persons connected, through interlocking directorates, with the war-trust manufacturers. The interests that are back of the Navy League are exactly the same interests that are back of the war-trafficking firms, and the group of individuals who are back of the war traffickers are the same men who are back of the great railroad companies of the United States, the great steamship companies, the great insurance companies, the telegraph companies, the express companies, and the great Wall Street banks, and even the Beef Trust is represented.

I am not now going to go into all of it, but I have all the details worked out, showing that the presidents of banks and steel companies and copper companies and steamship companies are all boosting for staggering increases in the appropriations for the Army and the Navy. For instance, the three dominant figures in the copper industry in this country are the Guggenheims, who are represented among the contributors to the Navy League; W. A. Clark, the copper king of Montana, who is an active director of the Navy League; and Cleveland H. Dodge, who is a vice president of the Navy League. They are all represented here.

Now I come down to the officers of the Navy League to-day. The president of the league, Col. Robert M. Thompson, the gentleman who was unkind enough to threaten to sue me but not kind enough to do it [applause on the Democratic side], is chairman of the board of directors of the International Nickel Co., the business of which, according to the Wall Street Journal, has been very much improved by the war.

The directorate of the International Nickel Co. interlocks with that of the United States Steel Corporation, Edmund C. Converse sitting as a director on both concerns. United States Steel controls the bulk of the steel industry in this country, and is capitalized for $1,512,000,000, while International Nickel controls the greater part of the nickel lands of the North American Continent, and is capitalized at $47,000,000.

Col. Thompson, as president of the Navy League, was a happy selection indeed, because the steel, nickel, and copper interests, all of which will profit handsomely through war and preparation for war, interlock beautifully through him and his International Nickel Co. W. A. Clark, the Montana "copper king," is president of the Waclark Wire Co. and Col. Thompson is one of his directors on that corporation. Then, too, Col. Thompson is president of the New York Metal Exchange.

Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co. also interlocks with the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co., W. E. Corey being a director of International Nickel and president and director of the new Midvale corporation, which was organized recently for $100,000,000 especially to handle the growing war-trafficking trade, and is one of the largest war-trading firms in the United States. Mr. Corey only recently retired from the presidency of the Carnegie Steel Co. and from the board of directors of United States Steel. One of the underlying concerns of the new Mid-vide company is the Remington Arms Co., which has a contract to manufacture 2,000,000 Enfield rifles for the British Government.

The International Nickel Co. also interlocks with the Midvale concern through Ambrose Monell, who is president of the International Nickel Co. and a director of the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co.

Seward Prosser, another director of International Nickel, is one of the contributors to the funds of the Navy League which have been used to banquet Secretaries of the Navy and Members of Congress, hire speakers, and carry on the elaborate campaign for "preparedness" which the Navy League has been carrying on most earnestly for the last 13 years, and which promises now to bear fruit in the form of staggering increases in Army and Navy appropriations.

International Nickel also interlocks directly with the United States Navy Department, through W. H. Brownson, retired rear admiral, who is a director of the International Nickel Co. and on the pay roll of the Government at a salary of $6,000 a year, which is three-fourths full pay. "Who's Who" for 1914–15 gives Admiral Brownson's address as "Navy Department, Washington, D. C." Admiral Brownson is, no doubt, of more value to the International Nickel Co. in Washington, where he comes into intimate contact with fellow naval officers, than he would be any place else.

Are there any reasons, other than purely patriotic ones, why officers and directors of the Nickel Trust might be urging, through the Navy League, a $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships, and so forth? Light may be had on this subject by referring to a table to be found on page 5259 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, last session. The table in question is headed "Metal per ton of armor," and is a part of the report of Senator TILLMAN, Representative PADGETT, and Admiral Strauss, of the Navy Department, as to the cost of manufacturing armor plate.

This table states that of every $5,274 worth of metal used in the manufacture of armor plate $2,953 represents the value of the nickel scrap and $1,466 represents the value of the metallic nickel used in the manufacture of armor.

Information is not given as to the amount of metallic nickel in nickel scrap, but I understand that the value of metallic nickel in a ton of nickel scrap is approximately 50 per cent of the value of nickel scrap. This would mean that $2,942 represents the value of the nickel in every $5,274 worth of metal used in the manufacture of armor.

The 1914 hearings of the House Naval Affairs Committee also contains (p. 522) an estimate on "Cost of ingot," which states that in every $3,028 worth of metal used $753 represents the value of the nickel in scrap, $840 the nickel in plaquettes, and $447 the nickel-chrome scrap, nickel turnings, and nickel-chrome rails. Estimating that the nickel in the latter three items represents approximately one-third of the whole value, it would mean, under this estimate, that $1,742 represents the value of the nickel in every $3,028 worth of metal used in the manufacture of armor.

The International Nickel Co. does not sell directly to the Government but to the various concerns that produce the finished article.

Nor is the use of nickel confined to armor plate. It goes into ammunition hoists, communication tubes and turrets, deck, hull, and ship plates, guns and gun shields, rifles and small arms, torpedo air reservoirs, marine straight-line shafting, crank shafts, piston rods, and other marine-engine forgings. This is all stated in the following advertisement of the Orford Copper Co., which concern is wholly owned by Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co., the advertisement appearing repeatedly in the Navy League Journal:

> Nickel steel for armor plate, ammunition hoists, communication tubes and turrets, deck, hull, and ship plate, guns and gun shields, rifles and small arms, torpedo air reservoirs, marine straight-line shafting, crank shafts, piston rods, and other marine-engine forgings.
> Annealed nickel steel castings have higher physical properties and resist abrasion better than low-carbon steel forgings.
> The addition of nickel to steel (a) increases the proportional elastic limit; (b) adds to the ductility of the steel; (c) increases its resistance to compression; (d) increases its resistance to abrasion; (e) increases its resistance to shock; (f) increases its toughness.
> Nickel steel is therefore a safer material than carbon steel.
> The Orford Copper Co., nickel refiners, 43 Exchange Place, New York.

Col. Thompson is a director of the Costa Rica Development Co., the Massey Station Mining Co., and a member of the firm of S. H. P. Pell & Co., 43 Exchange Place, New York City. Mr. Pell, the head of this firm, was a director of the American Mines Development Co., International Nickel Co., Massey Station Mining Co., North Butte Mountain Copper Co., and 10 other corporations.

The International Nickel Co. was created through a consolidation of the International Nickel Co. and the Colonial Nickel Co., and is credited with controlling the nickel market of the world. The corporation owns all the shares of the Canadian Copper Co., and of the Societe Miniere Caledonienne (New Caledonia), and the controlling interest in the Nickel Corporation (Ltd.), of Great Britain. The International Nickel Co. acquired all the assets of the Orford Copper Co., and the extensive refining works at Bayonne, N. J., are now operated under the name of the Orford Works. The properties owned by the Canadian Copper Co. include large deposits of nickel in the Sudbury, Ontario, mining district, with large smelting plants at Copper Cliff, Ontario, and extensive water-power plants at High Falls, Ontario, the title to the power plant being vested in the Huronian Co. (Ltd.). The company and its subsidiaries are engaged in mining, smelting, and refining nickel and copper ores and selling same in the form of ingot, shot, and electrolytic; also manufacture nickel salts. The company controls the process of manufacture of what is called "Monel metal," a natural alloy of nickel and copper, produced from its Canadian ores. This metal combines the very high tensile strength of steel with the ductility of copper, and is noncorrosive. This metal is supplied to the trade as castings, rods, sheets, and so forth.

As to whether the International Nickel Co. is a war trafficker, the Wall Street Journal, March 23, 1915, has the following to say:

> As a result of the demand for cartridges and shells, the International Nickel Co. is receiving unusually large orders for nickel. The metal is necessary in the manufacture of the various kinds of ammunition, and the various manufacturers of munitions, such as Bethlehem Steel Corporation, Remington Arms, and Union Metallic Cartridge Co., have found it necessary to increase their supply of nickel.

Still referring to the firm of which the president of the Navy League is the head, the Wall Street Journal, April 6, 1915, said:

> As a result of increase in orders received recently by the International Nickel Co. earnings on the common stock in the current fiscal year begun this month are expected to set a new high record at 12 per cent or better. Part of this great demand for nickel is due to the introduction of a cartridge projectile made exclusively of copper and nickel. Inquiries were recently made for the placing of a trial order for 5,000,000 such bullets.

The Wall Street Journal of May 22 reported that the business of the Nickel Trust was soaring higher and higher, and that the "increase in business was mainly due to the war."

International Nickel advanced nine points in one day. The Standard Corporation Service report for July 15, 1915, commenting on this advance, said:

> The company's business continues to increase from month to month, with June being the best month on record, and the quarter ended June 30 showing earnings at the rate of more than 20 per cent per annum.
> The rapid increase in the company's business is indirectly due to the war, which has caused an abnormal demand for munitions and automobiles, in both of which nickel is used extensively. In addition to this the record high prices for copper, of which metal the company produces millions of pounds annually, have served to increase earnings.

Nickel is used in the manufacture of submarines to a considerable extent. It is made use of, according to the Wall Street Journal, in the new electric batteries for submarines, invented by Thomas A. Edison, which will prevent the generation of chlorine gas. In this instance the nickel supplants lead. Another source of increased revenue is the high price of copper. The company's ore recovery is estimated to be about 70 per cent nickel and 30 per cent copper. The company owns the most extensive known existing nickel ore deposits. Its patented nickel lands in Ontario, Canada, cover 100,000 acres, and in addition to this the company owns the town of Copper Cliff. It also owns the shares of the Societe Miniere Caledonienne of New Caledonia, which company owns extensive nickel lands. These lands, it is estimated, will furnish the company with at least 60 years' ore supply. Earnings during the months of June, July, and August, according to well-informed interests, were at the rate of between 25 per cent and 30 per cent a year on the common stock.

Thus it will be seen that the head of the Navy League has the nickel, plenty of it, enough to last for 60 years. All that remains to be done is to get Uncle Samuel to buy it. If Col. Thompson can manage to put through the Navy League's proposed $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships, and so forth, perhaps the Nickel Trust will be able to pay even 50 per cent or 60 per cent on its common stock. If there is any more profitable way for the head of the Nickel Trust to spend his time than in Washington pointing out to the Senators and Congressmen the frightful insecurity of the Nation, it would be interesting to know how he could do it. It need not be said that he is not a great patriot, and it can not be said that he is not a great business man. It is not every man who can make patriotism a business and make it pay 20 per cent or 30 per cent!

CONNECTING LINKS BETWEEN THE NAVY LEAGUE AND THE HOUSE OF J. P. MORGAN & CO., 23 WALL STREET, NEW YORK.

The Navy League upon close examination would appear to be little more than a branch office of the house of J. P. Morgan & Co. and a general sales promotion bureau for the various armor and munition makers and the steel, nickel, copper, and zinc interests. At least, they are all represented among the directors, officers, founders, or life members of or contributors to the Navy League.

Especially are all forms of big business represented, and big business invariably heads in at 23 Wall Street, New York.

J. P. Morgan was formerly treasurer of the Navy League and is now a director and contributor. He is a director also of the United States Steel Corporation and many other corporations.

Herbert L. Satterlee, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy Department and a brother-in-law of J. P. Morgan, was one of the incorporators and founders of the Navy League and is the present general counsel of the league.

The late J. P. Morgan was one of the founders and principal contributors to the Navy League, and as late as June 10, 1915, $2,000 was subscribed on behalf of the Morgan estate.

Edward T. Stotesbury, a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. and a director of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and until recently a director of Cambria Steel Co., Phoenix Iron Co., Riverside Metal Co., Temple Iron Co., Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co., and 54 other corporations, banks, and trust companies, is one of the honorary vice presidents of the Navy League. The Wall Street Journal on July 26, 1915, reported that the Baldwin Locomotive Works had received a war order for $80,000,000 worth of shells and other munitions.

Robert Bacon, former Secretary of State and partner of J. P. Morgan & Co. and first director of the United States Steel Corporation, is a director of the Navy League.

Henry C. Frick, a fellow director of J. P. Morgan on both the United States Steel Corporation and the National City Bank of New York, is an honorary vice president of the Navy League.

Jacob H. Schiff, a director with J. P. Morgan on the National City Bank of New York, contributed $1,000 to the Navy League June 10, 1915.

J. Ogden Armour, a director with J. P. Morgan on the National City Bank of New York, was one of a committee which, under the auspices of the National Security League, issued a statement certifying as to the patriotism of the Navy League.

Cleveland H. Dodge, a director with J. P. Morgan on the National City Bank of New York and a director of the American Brass Co., Commercial Mining Co., Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Co., Detroit Copper Mining Co. of Arizona, Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co., Montezuma Copper Co., and the United Globe Mines, is a life member of the Navy League. Marcellus H. Dodge, a nephew of Cleveland H. Dodge, is a director on the boards of the Remington Arms-Union Metallic Cartridge Co. and the Remington Arms & Ammunition Co. Cleveland H. Dodge is vice president of Phelps, Dodge & Co. (Ltd.), a $45,000,000 corporation, which is one of the leading factors in the copper industry in the United States. Although the millions of Cleveland H. Dodge have been multiplied through the increased value of his copper holdings as a result of the European war, his firms appear unwilling to share their prosperity with their miners in Arizona. Some 5,000 copper miners are now on strike, and because Gov. Hunt, of Arizona, has dared to protect them against an invasion of lawless thugs and strikebreakers, the mine owners are circulating petitions for his recall. The leading corporation involved in the Clifton-Morenci strike is Phelps, Dodge & Co., of which Cleveland H. Dodge is vice president. The company in 1912 earned 23 per cent on its capital of $45,000,000 and paid a 15 per cent dividend. To-day copper is higher than at any time in nine years, yet the company refuses to grant its men a wage increase or to make any concession. The principal property of the company at Clifton paid in 1912 a dividend of 146½ per cent on a capital of $1,000,000.

Joseph P. Grace, a director with J. P. Morgan on the National City Bank of New York, is one of the contributors to the funds of the Navy League.

George F. Baker, jr., a director of the First National Bank of New York and a son of a director of the United States Steel Corporation, contributed $1,000 to the Navy League June 10, 1915.

Allan A. Ryan, a director of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, is a contributor to the Navy League, and George R. Sheldon, another director of the Bethlehem Corporation and also a director of the American Locomotive Co., both of which concerns have profited hugely from European war orders, is an honorary vice president of the Navy League. Considering that Charles M. Schwab, the president of Bethlehem, is one of the founders of the Navy League, it would appear that this war-trafficking firm has full representation in this organization. And it always has been well represented. Robert H. Sayre, a former general manager of Bethlehem, was a life member of the Navy League, and Lieut. J. F. Meigs, who left the Navy Department to go into the employ of Bethlehem, was also a life member.

Beekman Winthrop, a former Assistant Secretary of the Navy and now a director of the Lackawanna Steel Co., is a director of the Navy League.

Former United States Senator W. A. Clark, the "copper king of Montana," is a director of the Navy League and a director of the W. A. Clark Titanite Explosive Co., Colusa-Parrot Mining & Smelting Co., Equator Mining & Smelting Co., Henry-Bonnard Bronze Co., Mayflower Consolidated Mining Co., Moulton Mining Co., Ophir Hill Consolidated Mining Co., Original Consolidated Mining Co., Sunset Mining Co., United Verde Copper Co., and 26 other corporations.

Charles F. Brooker, honorary vice president of the Navy League, is president and director of the American Brass Co. and a director of the United States Smelting, Refining & Mining Co., Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Mechanics & Metals National Bank of the city of New York, and 15 other banks, trust companies, and corporations. On April 10, 1915, Mr. Brooker also owned 474 shares of Bethlehem Steel, which was worth $40 a share previous to the outbreak of the European war, and went as high as $600 on October 22, 1915.

Lewis L. Clarke, treasurer of the Navy League, is a director of the American Locomotive Co. The Standard Corporation Service on May 3, 1915, reported that the American Locomotive Co. had concluded negotiations with the British Government for the manufacture of 5,000,000 shrapnel shells to cost $66,250,000.

A Barton Hepburn, honorary vice president of the Navy League, is a director of the American Car & Foundry Co., which has received large munitions contracts from the allies.

Henry B. Joy, vice president of the Navy League, who opposes Government manufacture of war munitions, is president of the Packard Motor Car Co., which has received large orders from the allies.

T. Coleman du Pont, president of the Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., was formerly a vice president of the Navy League. The du Ponts have managed to maintain a monopoly of the sale of smokeless powder to the United States Government, and have received some $25,000,000 worth of contracts in the last 10 years.

I do not desire to make the charge that President Thompson and Secretary Dadmun, of the Navy League, are deliberately falsifying in insisting that this purely patriotic organization is backed by "men who will not profit by the league's propaganda," because it is possible that they have reiterated this view so often that they have come to actually believe it themselves. I doubt, however, whether they can convince the American people that they have not been imposed upon.

Now, in closing, Mr. Speaker, all I desire to say is that if we can ever take the profit out of war and preparation for war, there will be no difficulty in solving this problem of national defense. Then we will know that people are not advocating it because they are making big profits out of it, but because they really want to see the Republic safe from invasion, and I hope that before this Congress comes to a close we shall have passed legislation looking toward the Government manufacture of all munitions of war, so that war will be no more attractive to Mr. Morgan and his friends than it is to the rest of us, and I feel confident that I express the opinion of all present when I say that to us war is not attractive at all!

I thank you for your kind attention. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. TILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question, if he will permit.

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes. But first, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman if he is willing to let me propound a question which he so discourteously refused me earlier in his remarks?

Mr. TAVENNER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, gentlemen have gotten into the practice in the last year or so of asking to "revise and extend" their remarks. The request never used to be made in that form. The extension of remarks is one thing; the privilege of cutting out things is another.

Mr. TAVENNER. I want to put in. I do not want to cut out.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I have no doubt that is the case. I hope the gentleman will make his request to extend.

Mr. TAVENNER. Will the gentleman take the same attitude toward all similar requests?

Mr. MANN. I will do as I please about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. Now, the gentleman from Connecticut——

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question which I propounded earlier in the course of his remarks, and which at that time he did not feel disposed to answer?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Earlier in the gentleman's remarks he said something like this:

> It is a very strange thing that the Army officers do not want it to appear that they are manufacturing things too cheaply in Government arsenals, because they want to give as much as possible to private manufacturers.

In connection with that statement the gentleman referred to armament rings, armor rings, war traffickers, and so on, making, in my mind, a very clear implication that these Army officers were either corrupt, or at least did not have very high ideals of their duty, in preferring to make the Government pay dearly for its ammunition and armor purchased from private parties rather than manufacture them more cheaply in Government plants. Does the gentleman wish to create the impression that that is true?

Mr. TAVENNER. That is my intention, to create that impression, that certain of our Army and Navy officials have wasted the taxpayers' money as if it were water. I ask unanimous consent to have my time extended half an hour. I am going to answer the gentleman and give specific facts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended half an hour so that he can answer the question.

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker [laughter on the Democratic side], I wish the gentleman to have time, provided he will yield for reasonable questioning.

Mr. TAVENNER. I will.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I have been very much interested in the gentleman's discussion of the origin and make-up of the Navy League. There is also a National Security League. Has the gentleman investigated that?

Mr. TAVENNER. The most of the gentlemen back of the National Security League live in Western States, and I have never looked them up. I do not know anything about the National Security League.

The SPEAKER. Let us settle this question of the extension of time. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] having 30 minutes more? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman has 6 minutes left of his old hour, and that gives him 36 minutes.

Mr. TAVENNER. I charge that the Chief of Ordnance, who awards these contracts for the Army, has awarded contracts running into millions of dollars annually, and he has paid private manufacturers, and particularly the Bethlehem Steel Co., from 20 to 60 per cent more than these supplies would have cost if manufactured in Government plants. The man who awards these contracts, Gen. Crozier, was formerly in partnership with the Bethlehem Steel Co. He took out a patent on what is known as the Buffington-Crozier disappearing gun carriage, and he and another Army officer, who was, by the way, the preceding Chief of Ordnance of the Army, sold that patent to the Bethlehem Steel Co. for $10,000; and he went into a contract with the Bethlehem Steel Co. by which he was to receive royalties on all of these disappearing gun carriages that should be sold to foreign nations.

Why, gentlemen, the other day I saw where some American, who was not even in the employ of the Government, was said to have made a great invention, and he was reported as saying, "I will not sell my invention to any foreign country. The result of my brains in making this invention will be kept for my own country." [Applause.] But here was an Army officer, who was educated at the expense of the American people, who took his invention, which was perfected in Government workshops at the expense of the American people, going into a contract with the Bethlehem Steel Co. under which he was to receive $1,000 royalty on every gun of a certain bore, $1,500 royalty on every gun of a different bore, and $2,300 on every gun of another bore that should be sold to foreign countries.

What would happen if the United States should become involved in a war with one of the countries which might have bought the invention upon which this American Army officer received a royalty? That same Army officer might have been leading a company, and his own men shot down by the guns perfected at the expense of the American people, simply in order that he might have a royalty on each gun. [Applause.] I want an investigation, and I want him to produce a copy of that contract.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Is it not a fact that some of these munition concerns have at their head or employed in some capacity men who have been educated at Annapolis or West Point?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; and some are now on the pay roll of the Government. If you want to get in touch with the Du Pont Powder Co. go out to the telephone booth and call up the Du Pont Powder Co., and the man who will answer that call will be Gen. Humphrey, a man to-day on the pay roll of the United States Government, receiving $6,000 a year, and yet serving the Du Pont powder trust. [Applause.] "Who's Who" gives the address of this Du Pont employee as "War Department, Washington, D. C."

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The gentleman from Illinois has seen fit to attack Gen. Humphrey by name. I only know him by sight and have seen him but a few times at that.

Mr. TAVENNER. Is the gentleman from Delaware making a speech or asking a question?

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I simply want to ask a question. Does the gentleman think that it is fair to criticize a man who in the course of his service has been retired by law by reason of his age and yet is in the position to make an additional sum necessary for his support? Does the gentleman think he ought to criticize him?

Mr. TAVENNER. I not only think it is fair to criticize him but I consider that it is my duty. When I see a man on the pay roll of the Government serving those who have exploited and betrayed the Government, I think it is my duty to point them out and ask the American people to look at them. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I will take the opportunity to contradict some of the misstatements which the gentleman has made.

Mr. TAVENNER. If you want to know more about the Du Pont Powder Co. I will go a little further.

The Du Ponts and the Government have been in the habit of exchanging secrets in the manufacture of powder. Government chemists and Government officers are continually experimenting to improve the quality of powder, and full information is furnished the Du Ponts.

And the Du Ponts were at one time—they are not now—in an agreement with a German firm—the United Rheinisch Westphalian Gunpowder Mills—to keep it informed of all improvements in the processes of powder making.

Here is the actual wording of the contract:

> Tenth. That any and every improvement upon said processes or either of them made by either of the parties hereto at any time hereafter shall forthwith be imparted to the other of the parties hereto.

And even this is not all. The Du Ponts agreed to keep the German concern informed at all times of all powder furnished to the United States Government, stating in detail its quality and characteristics, and even the quantity, making themselves, to all practical ends, paid informers of a foreign Government.

Here is the exact language:

> Thirteenth. That the parties of the second part [the Du Ponts] will, as soon as possible, inform the party of the first part [the German concern] of each and every contract for brown powder or nitrate of ammonia powder received by the parties of the second part from the Government of the United States or any other contracting party or parties, stating in detail quantity, price, time of delivery, and all of the requirements that the powder called for in such contract has to fulfill.

As the German Government maintains a strict supervision over German military manufacturing concerns, there can be little doubt but that the German Government knew of every pound of powder we purchased during the life of this agreement, its exact quality, and exactly the extent of our reserve supply.

I quote the following from an article by Charles Johnson Post, in Harper's Weekly for May 9, 1914:

> Do you recall the friction with Germany in 1898 over the German naval squadron in Manila Bay? A German admiral brought on a situation that might have held momentous consequences. And Germany knew to a pound what our powder reserves were and what their qualities were.

The names attached to the German contract were Eugene du Pont, Francis G. du Pont, H. A. du Pont, William du Pont, trading as the E. I. Du Pont de Nemours Co.

Now, one of the men whose name is signed to this contract has been sitting as chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs. I say it is a crying shame that one of these men should be allowed to have anything to do with any part of the Government that makes appropriations for the Army or for the Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Delaware will please take his seat.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I was going to raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take care of that. The Chair admonishes the gentleman from Illinois that it is against the rules of the House to drag into debate the action of Senators in another body.

Mr. TAVENNER. May not the Member do it if it is in a public document?

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House provide that the acts of the Senate or Senators shall not be criticized by Members of the House.

Mr. TAVENNER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw what I said about the Senator, because I do not wish to violate any rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his remark about Senator DU PONT.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not know whether the gentleman has stated, but I assume he has, where the Du Pont Powder Co. is located, in what State and in what congressional district?

Mr. TAVENNER. It is in the State of Delaware.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Missouri does not know, tell him, for he seems to be ignorant on lots of subjects.

The SPEAKER. Part of it is in my own district. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. It is a New Jersey organization.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I would like to ask if the gentleman from Illinois has used all of his time?

The SPEAKER. He has not.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will he permit me to ask him a few questions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Delaware that a Member does not have to use all of his time.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor or yield for a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. For a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. The remarks you made were approximately the same remarks contained in your speech in the last Congress, were they not?

Mr. TAVENNER. Some of them.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. You stated there practically the same that you have read here to-day from your manuscript, and you quoted from an article by Mr. Post written in the Harper's Weekly, did you not?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes; which article was answered, and after which it was unnecessary to change the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." It was answered by the vice president of the Du Pont powder trust, and, after saying that there was no Du Pont lobby or anything like it in Washington, he himself admitted that he employed an ex-Army officer and an ex-Member of Congress to represent the Du Pont powder trust in the National Capital.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. It was not my intention to cause the gentleman to use so much of his time in reply to that question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. When one gentleman asks a question of another he must submit to an answer.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Do you know the date of the contract about which you are trying to draw unfounded insinuations?

Mr. TAVENNER. I do not know. I have not given the date here.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Well, you had better be prepared to get your knowledge straight when you talk that way.

Mr. TAVENNER. H. A. du Pont is the same du Pont whose signature is attached to that contract, and I say that anyone whose signature is attached to an agreement of that kind should not be trusted with any Government secrets, because he betrayed the confidence of the American people and his own country, simply in order that he could make profits.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Will the gentleman permit me to enlighten him in his own time as to this contract?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will please give heed to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. TAVENNER. Very well.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I know that you do not want to put out a lot of insinuations that are not backed up by the facts.

Mr. TAVENNER. I have endeavored to state the facts exactly and specifically.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. You did not state them in connection with the German contract you referred to.

Mr. TAVENNER. I gave the name of the firm.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. That may be true. I can not give the names of firms in as good German as you can.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Delaware that it is against the rules and practice of the House to address another Member, using the words "you" or "thou."

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that we have both infringed the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Members generally learn the rules gradually. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield the floor?

Mr. TAVENNER. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

IT IS NOT A CRIME, BUT A FACT, THAT THE MUNITIONS PATRIOTS FOUNDED THE NAVY LEAGUE.

Mr. TAVENNER. The purpose for which I requested unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD was to go into the personnel of the Navy League and show the amazing extent to which men affiliated with concerns or industries which stand to profit from "preparedness" are connected with the Navy League.

I desire to preface my remarks with the assurance that I am not charging, and have never asserted, that it is a crime of any kind for stockholders of war-trafficking concerns to be the founders and principal backers of the Navy League. I am simply stating that it is a fact that they are; the officers of the Navy League have been insisting that it was not the fact. Col. Thompson, president of the Navy League, and A. H. Dadmun, secretary, would have the innocent Navy League members and the American public believe that all those who have intimated that their organization is connected directly or remotely with the Wall Street controlled War Trust are anti-patriots. The Navy League, according to Col. Thompson and Secretary Dadmun, is backed by "men who will not profit by the result of the League's propaganda."

And it is fortunate, indeed, that it is not a crime for men who own stock in war-trafficking firms to be affiliated with the Navy League, for if it were nearly every one of the great war-trafficking firms of the United States would have one of its directors or stockholders in the penitentiary.

I am not contending that the powder, armor, and munitions firms have no right to encourage Uncle Sam to buy their wares. I am merely insisting that they shall do it in their true capacity as armor and munitions merchants and not by working alternately on the fears and patriotism of the American people, making patriotism the means and private profit and private graft the end.

I am not opposing the program of the Navy League because it is advocating "preparedness," but because of the kind of preparedness it is advocating. The Navy League is advocating a $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships, and so forth, but it is not advocating that the taxpayers should receive a dollar's worth of battleship for every dollar appropriated, or that the amount of increased naval appropriations should be raised by a tax on incomes or inheritances. The Navy League would have us believe this Nation needs every additional ounce of fighting force it can possibly obtain, yet it does not advocate that the people should be permitted to have a maximum striking force or a maximum resisting power for every dollar spent, instead of only 60 cents' worth, as they have been receiving. No; President Thompson, chairman of the board of directors of the International Nickel Co., has never called together J. P. Morgan, director of the United States Steel Corporation; Robert Bacon, director of United States Steel; Beekman Winthrop, director of the Lackawanna Steel Co., and the rest of the present directors of the Navy League, to consider the advisability of going on record in favor of taking private profit out of war and preparation for war by having the Government manufacture its own war material.

And it is not because the matter has not been called to the attention of the league. It is nearly two years now since I addressed, on January 16, 1914, a letter to the secretary of the League, in part, saying:

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 13th instant, together with inclosures as to why a powerful Navy is needed.

Assuming that you are in good faith in this agitation and really desire the largest possible Navy for patriotic reasons, I am going to take the liberty of suggesting to you that if you will inaugurate a movement for the Government manufacture of all munitions of war, including all battleships, your campaign will strike a much more responsive chord with both Members of Congress and the people.

In other words, if the Government is to do all of the manufacturing of munitions of war, including battleships, the point can not then be successfully raised that the agitation is for the benefit of the armor ring, the ammunition ring, and the Shipbuilding Trust.

But if you do not advocate the Government manufacture of all munitions of war, including battleships, you can not successfully deny that you are carrying on a propaganda which means millions and millions of dollars of extortionate profits to the above-mentioned interests.

No action, however, has been taken by the League. I believe that if Congress should decide to manufacture all of its battleships, submarines, armor, guns, and munitions and place the burden of the cost of the Army and Navy upon incomes and inheritances, where it should be placed, the Navy League would forthwith close the doors of its lobby in the National Capital and its backers would be the loudest to protest against an annual expenditure of $250,000,000 for war in time of peace.

I am not contending that our great financiers who own stock in war-trafficking firms and cry out to heaven through the Navy League for preparation for war have no patriotism, but I do assert that it is a very difficult matter to figure out what proportion of their preparedness agitation is due to love of country and what proportion to love of dividends.

Morgan and business associates of Morgan appear to have always been in control of the Navy League, although there have at all times been numbered among the officers, directors, and honorary vice presidents men whose disinterested patriotism is beyond question. And the members of the League as a whole can at the very outset be absolved of any suspicion of taint, as it is probable that for the most part they joined the organization in the belief its backers were prompted by considerations wholly and purely patriotic and that the inspirations of its founders were not in any sense directly or remotely associated with the business of making and selling armor and cannon.

Nothing is further from my desire than to be understood as in the slightest degree criticizing the action of any Secretary of the Navy or Member of Congress in participating in the Navy League banquets. They did not know that these banquets were conducted largely as business ventures, nor were they, in my opinion, aware of the interests back of the Navy League. Had they been aware of this fact, I doubt whether the attendance would have been so large.

ARMOR-PLATE MAKERS ARE THE MOST PATRIOTIC PATRIOTS ON EARTH.

There are but three firms in the United States that manufacture armor plate—Midvale, Bethlehem, and Carnegie companies—and each of them is represented in the list of 19 men who, according to the official journal of the Navy League, were the founders of the organization.

At the time this particular list of 19 founders of the Navy League was published there were some 80,000,000 or 90,000,000 ordinary individuals and thousands of directors of corporations in the United States.

Is it not a rather peculiar coincidence that among those 19 patriots who stepped forth from all the millions of American citizens to save the Republic by advocating larger appropriations for battleships, every armor-making concern in the United States should be represented? And that the greater half of the 19 patriots were connected with firms that would directly profit from such propaganda? And that most of those who were not directly concerned with such firms were connected in some manner with individuals or firms that would profit? To expect the intelligent men and women of this country to agree with the Navy League officials that this was not a peculiar coincidence is to assume that the American people are fools.

Or can it be that we are mistaken, and that the explanation of the presence of so many war traffickers among the founders of the Navy League is that patriotism just naturally runs to armor-plate makers? If the personnel of the Navy League is a thermometer registering the quantity and quality of the patriotism of an individual, then it can not be successfully denied that patriotism does run to the armor-plate makers.

And standing shoulder to shoulder in patriotism with the directors and stockholders of armor-plate-making concerns are the directors and stockholders of steel, and then of nickel, and copper, and zinc, and so on down the line. As we proceed to analyze the various groups of founders, life members, honorary vice presidents, and contributors to the Navy League covering its entire existence of 13 years the conviction will be gradually driven home to us that patriotism runs to metal, and that the Navy League is the magnet which draws together the men who make money handling metal in some form or other and who want to make more money. After these basic facts are clearly established in our minds it will not appear strange, but quite the logical thing, that our friend, Col. Robert M. Thompson, the president of the New York Metal Exchange, should be the president of the Navy League.

It is logic indisputable that since patriotism runs to metal the head of the greatest metal exchange in the world should be the king bee of the greatest and only, real, bona fide, simon-pure patriotic organization in the United States.

The chairman of the board of directors of the International Nickel Co. and the president of the New York Metal Exchange discovered that the United States was without a Navy away back in 1903. Col. Thompson might have been a founder of an Army league, or a State militia league, or a national militia league, but he was not. He is the chairman of the board of directors of the Nickel Trust, and nickel is the most important and most expensive metal that goes into armor plate, and armor plate is one of the most important and most expensive things that go into a dreadnaught, and Col. Thompson became a founder of the Navy League. He has been one of the most active heads of the Navy League ever since. By a coincidence that is almost weird, nickel, that valuable metal which is so indispensable in war trafficking, has also always been well to the forefront in the makeup of the Navy League of Great Britain. For many years Sir Alfred Mond, chairman of the Mond Nickel Co. of London, has been the vice-president of the British Navy League.

NAVY LEAGUE OF UNITED STATES COPIED FOREIGN NAVY LEAGUES.

The armor, munition, steel, copper, and nickel interests in this country are proceeding to make new business in the same manner that these interests have operated in other countries. The idea of a "navy league" did not originate in this country, but was copied from Germany and Great Britain. In both countries the moving spirits behind such organizations have been shown to be the individuals who would profit from the increased appropriations for navalism.

There also are navy leagues in France, Italy, Belgium, Portugal, and Spain. Those who manufacture guns, armor, and battleships realize that there is no better way to agitate for increased armaments than by making use of the patriotism of the masses. And the munitions patriots find that the most practical way to turn patriotism into private profits is to create the impression that a certain power is a menace. The more definite and immediate the "menace" can be pictured the larger and quicker the response and the greater the profits.

THE "ROUND ROBIN" OF THE NAVY LEAGUES.

Strange to say, the various navy leagues have been on the most friendly terms with one another and have cooperated, eulogized, and encouraged each other in the most brotherly fashion. This is decidedly armoresque.

The navy leagues of the various powers cooperate with one another just as the armament interests do, and there is a reason. They are the armament interests, with large memberships of sincere, patriotic men and women and many of the most prominent citizens roped in through false pretense.

It may be asked how it is to the interest of the armament concerns of one country to see another nation enlarging its naval building program. It should be remembered that the leading nations of the world fix their building programs in proportion to the size of the programs of the other powers. If one power increases the size of its fleet by two or three dreadnaughts the other powers feel that they must do the same. Thus it works as an endless chain, and there is no limit save the ultimate physical inability of the peoples of the earth to bear the burdens of taxation, which in this country are felt in the form of increase in the cost of living.

Admiral Dewey, for instance, says that the fleet of the United States should be larger than that of Great Britain by 1925. But by 1925 the fleet of Great Britain may be twice its present size. If it is a good policy for the United States to have a larger fleet than that of Great Britain it is a good thing for Great Britain to have a larger fleet than that of the United States. And so on.

The armament interests of one nation, therefore, like nothing better than to see a rival nation greatly increase its navy. And the navy leagues, being in reality the armament interests, do not look with disapproval upon the efforts of foreign navy leagues.

Let us analyze this fraternal spirit which exists among navy leagues—and which I endeavored to show existed so extensively between powder and armor manufacturers of the world in my remarks published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 15, 1915—and see if we can make head or tail out of it. One would think that if the Navy League of the United States was wholly sincere in its fear that this country, because of its alleged inadequate Navy, is in real danger of destruction at the hands of Germany or some other foreign power that the last thing that the navy league officers would want to see would be a propaganda in Germany to greatly increase the naval forces of that country.

Yet the Navy League of the United States, through its official organ, the Navy League Journal, has enthusiastically lauded the work and the spirit and the results of the propaganda carried on by the British Navy League, the Deutscher Flooten-Verein (the German Navy League), Ligue Maritime Française (the French Navy League), Lega Navale Italiana (the Italian Navy League), Ligue Maritime Belge (the Belgian Navy League), Liga Naval Portugueza (the Portuguese Navy League), and Liga Maritima Española (the Spanish Navy League). And I have no doubt there are Japanese and Chinese navy leagues, too, if I could but find some one to interpret the contents of their newspapers and navy journals. As between themselves the navy leagues are most brotherly and Christian-like.

Upon the death of Gen. Henry H. Boyce, secretary of the Navy League of the United States, in 1903, the league received the following condolences from the German Navy League:

BUSINESS HEADQUARTERS OF THE GERMAN NAVY LEAGUE,
Berlin, October 20, 1903.

To the NAVY LEAGUE OF THE UNITED STATES,
32 Broadway, New York City:

We have seen in the newspaper, with sincere sympathy, that your business chairman, Herr Gen. Henry H. Boyce, has lost his life through an accident. We regret that this energetic gentleman, who labored for your cause with such real zeal and ability, has been taken away from you. Requiescat in pace.

We trust that the successor of Herr Boyce may be equally as kindly disposed toward our German Navy League, and that he will also observe the motto, "May peace ever be maintained between the United States and Germany."

With the greatest respect,

MENGES,
Major General in Active Service and Business Chairman of the German Navy League.

You will notice from this missive that navy leagues have "business headquarters" and that the "business chairman" of the German Navy League hopes that the new business secretary of the Navy League of the United States will be as "kindly disposed toward the German Navy League" as Gen. Boyce had been.

The Navy League Journal, the official organ of the Navy League of the United States, time and again points admiringly to the work of the German Navy League. The German Navy League helped to bring about the present German Navy.

While its officers do not say so in so many words, the Navy League of the United States would now have us believe that we are in the greatest danger from the German Navy, and that we ought to rush through Congress a $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships, and so forth.

The Navy League Journal for December, 1903, referred to the work of the German Navy League in a spirit of profound admiration, concluding as follows:

Without exaggeration it may be asserted that to the German Navy League, more than to every other influence besides, is due the fast and wholesome growth of the German Navy.

The Navy League Journal might have added for the benefit of the American war-trading gentry:

See what the German Navy League has done in the way of making business and profit for the German armor and munitions makers. Come along, gentlemen, with your contributions to the Navy League of the United States. It will bring the same results for you that the German Navy League brought for the German armor and munitions makers.

In the Navy League Journal of July, 1903, the first issue of the league's official organ ever published, I find the following:

To-day Germany, thanks to enlightened statesmanship and the support of the public, but most of all on account of the efforts of the Flotten-Verein, or Navy League, whose astounding results we shall strive to emulate in this country, may be looked upon as the fourth sea power in the world.

What better inducement could have been offered our armor-plate makers, our powder and gun manufacturers, and our battleship builders to make liberal contributions to the Navy League of the United States than this promise "to emulate in this country" the "astounding results" of the German Navy League?

The American munitions makers saw the point, and within the year following the first appearance of the Navy League Journal the Schwabs and the J. P. Morgans, the Thompsons and the Astors, the Cleveland H. Dodges, and the Midvale Steel companies, stepped forward as true patriots and enrolled themselves as founders and life members, directors and contributing members, ordinary members and honorary vice presidents, their patriotism fired by the hope and expectation that the Navy League of the United States would bring them as large profits as the German Navy League had brought their brother war traders in Germany.

For 13 years the Navy League of the United States has been pushing its "emulation" of the parent navy league just as fast as the sentiment in a democracy would permit, and it may be said that the results now bid fair to be "astounding." The profits to the munitions patriots will in all probability be equally "astounding."

But is not this "round robin" of the navy leagues a most impressive picture of the failure of our boasted civilization to really civilize? It has been said that "there is no politics in business," and this "business" of the navy leagues of the "civilized" world is the supreme exhibition of the truth of this old saying that there is no principle in greedy trade. Think for a moment of these British, French, German, Italian, and Spanish navy leagues thus clasping hands around the world to stimulate armies and navies so that they may be able at the least provocation to destroy the tens of thousands of innocent, thoughtless people who are actually believing in and supporting these organizations as their protectors!

Instead of encouraging and stimulating each other to work for an annual increase of death-dealing machinery and armament, why do they not adopt the reverse effort and suggest to each nation an annual reduction of the armament which leads to that infamous business of war, by which millions are destroyed and ruined in order that a few thousands may wickedly live on ill-gotten riches and power?

And the only answer the backers of the Navy League will make to us, if they make it truthfully, will be: "It does not pay."

FROM WALL STREET TO THE PRESIDENT'S CABINET AND BACK AGAIN.

In tracing the business connections of the men behind the Navy League one can not avoid being impressed by the number of instances in recent years in which those identified with the steel and armor making concerns find their way into the official life of the Navy Department, the Department of Justice, and even the Department of State.

And the frequency with which ex-officials of these departments find their way into the employment of the steel and armor plate makers is no less impressive.

There is, in fact, a well-beaten path between the armor and steel makers and the executive departments enumerated, each of which plays such an important part in molding the policies of the Government and in the long run the destiny of the Republic.

At least two recent Secretaries of State were affiliated with steel and armor plate concerns, either before or after their service in the Cabinet of the President of the United States. Their portraits hang in the gorgeous reception room at the State Department, and each is twice the size of that of Thomas Jefferson, which occupies a less-conspicuous space near by.

It is not my purpose to comment either favorably or adversely, but to present facts—facts which I consider important enough to call to the attention of the American people; otherwise I would not present them.

One of the portraits to which I have reference is that of Robert Bacon, who is now a director of the United States Steel Corporation, which controls the armor-making Carnegie Steel Co. Mr. Bacon is also a director of the Navy League. J. P. Morgan is his fellow director on both the Navy League and United States Steel. For 10 years previous to his appointment as Assistant Secretary of State Mr. Bacon was a member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, New York. Mr. Bacon was Assistant Secretary of State under Elihu Root, from 1905 to 1909, excepting for the period between January 27 and March 6, 1909, when he was Secretary of State, succeeding Mr. Root, who had been elected to the Senate. In addition to his present connection with United States Steel, Mr. Bacon is a director of the Fulton Chain Railway Co., Fulton Navigation Co., Nassau Light & Power Co., Racquette Lake Railway Co., and a trustee of the Bank for Savings in the city of New York. Before and after his service in the State Department Mr. Bacon was a director of the Northern Securities Co., which was organized in 1901 with a capitalization of $395,400,000 to invest in and hold securities of other corporations. The primary purpose of its organization, however, was to act as "holding company" for the stocks of the Northern Pacific Railway Co., but in March, 1904, the United States Supreme Court declared the company to be a combination in violation of the antitrust act, and in 1904 the stockholders voted to reduce the capital stock to $3,954,000.

The second portrait to which I refer is that of Philander C. Knox, which hangs by that of Elihu Root.

In 1900, and for the 10 years previous, Mr. Knox was the attorney for the Carnegie Steel Co., one of the three firms comprising the armor ring in the United States. On April 9, 1901, Mr. Knox became Attorney General of the United States. His appointment had been recommended to President McKinley by Andrew Carnegie. The United States Steel Corporation was formed at almost the very date Mr. Knox became Attorney General. No prosecution was ever started against the steel corporation as long as Mr. Knox was Attorney General. It is fair to say that the prosecution against the Steel Trust that was started after he left the office of Attorney General was not sustained in the courts.

This information was extracted from Andrew Carnegie with the greatest difficulty while he was testifying before the Stanley steel investigating committee on January 11, 1912. Much of this information, little as it is, would probably not have been obtained had not Mr. Carnegie's memory been refreshed by his counsel, Judge Reed.

The following extracts from Mr. Carnegie's testimony are of interest:

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I understood you to say yesterday that you did not know the effects or the scope of the antitrust law that was passed in 1890. That is true, isn't it?

Mr. CARNEGIE. Certainly it is. A more ignorant man never lived upon that.

Mr. Carnegie took the attitude he knew little or nothing about the existence of the Sherman antitrust law. He said he thought it applied to railroads. Mr. Carnegie parried most of the questions put to him, and apparently desired the committee to get the impression that he considered his appearance before the committee as something in the nature of a lark.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY, one of the members of the investigating committee, at one point sharply reprimanded Mr. Carnegie, warning him to desist from further "nonsense." Mr. McGILLICUDDY thought it strange that Mr. Carnegie's counsel had not informed him of so important an antitrust measure as the Sherman law, and pursued the point over several pages of the printed testimony of the hearings.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Was Philander C. Knox one of the attorneys of the Carnegie Co. from 1890 to 1900?

Mr. CARNEGIE (turning to his counsel, Judge Reed). Was he, Judge?

Judge REED. Yes.

Mr. CARNEGIE. His partner, Judge Reed, tells me so.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. The partner you speak of is the attorney who appears for you now to-day, Judge Reed?

Mr. CARNEGIE. Yes; Judge Reed.

* * * * * * *

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. During all that time did any of the members of that firm (Knox & Reed) advise you with reference to the antitrust law of 1890?

Mr. CARNEGIE. I never heard a word from any of them.

* * * * * * *

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Did you recommend that same attorney, Philander C. Knox, for appointment as Attorney General of the United States later on?

Mr. CARNEGIE. I never did——

Judge REED. Yes; you did, Mr. Carnegie; pardon me.

Mr. CARNEGIE. Did I? [Laughter.]

Judge REED. Certainly. You wrote a letter for him to President McKinley.

* * * * * * *

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. At the same time that Mr. Knox went into the Cabinet of the President of the United States, did Mr. Reed, the other partner, go into the directorate of the United States Steel Co.?

Mr. CARNEGIE. I am unable to answer that.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. You may consult with Mr. Reed.

Judge REED. Yes.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. That is true, is it?

Judge REED. Certainly.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Then the two attorneys that your company had for these 10 years, from 1890 to 1900, one of them went into the Cabinet of the President of the United States and the other went into the directorate of the United States Steel Co. Is that right?

Mr. CARNEGIE. So the Judge says.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. You have no doubt that is true?

Mr. CARNEGIE. Anything he says is true.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. After that corporation (United States Steel) was formed, during the entire McKinley administration, while Mr. Knox was Attorney General, no prosecution of any kind was instituted against the United States Steel Corporation that you know of? That is true?

Mr. CARNEGIE. I suppose it is. I never heard of any.

Mr. Knox was Attorney General from April 9, 1901, to June 30, 1904, was elected to the United States Senate in 1905, resigning in 1909 to become Secretary of State.

Herbert L. Satterlee, a brother-in-law of J. P. Morgan, director United States Steel, and general counsel for the Navy League, was formerly an Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Beekman Winthrop, director of the Navy League, left the position of Assistant Secretary of the Navy and became a director of the Lackawanna Steel Co. Lackawanna has greatly profited from the European war. The Wall Street Journal on August 24, 1915, stated that the concern's earnings for the year should be around $10,000,000. Large orders for rails from Russia and shrapnel bars from France were reported to have been received. The stock has advanced from 28 early in 1915 to 80 on January 3, 1916.

W. H. Brownson, retired rear admiral, now drawing $6,000 a year from the Government, is a director of the International Nickel Co.

Charles F. Humphrey, who receives $6,000 a year from the Government as retired major general, is an employee of the Du Pont Powder Co. E. G. Buckner, vice president of the Du Pont Co., testified before a committee of Congress that he employed Gen. Humphrey at Washington to "look after such little details as getting information from all of the departments."

WAR TRAFFICKERS FIND EMPLOYMENT OF NAVY OFFICERS A GOOD INVESTMENT.

Whenever there has been an investigation by Congress of the Navy Department—and there has not been one for a good many years—the investigators incidentally turned up information showing that Navy officers were secretly connected with the armor-making concerns.

The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs of the Fifty-fourth Congress in 1897 was doing a little investigating into the reasonableness of the cost of armor and discovered that 8 or 10 naval officers were on the pay rolls of armor and steel companies and at the same time on the pay roll of the Government.

When an officer received an offer to go into the employment of a private firm having dealings with the Navy Department, it was the custom to obtain leave of absence with what was known as waiting-orders pay, which amounted to $2,300 a year, the officer at the same time receiving a salary usually of $5,000 or $6,000 a year in addition from the war trading firm with which he had taken employment. Lieut. C. A. Stone, even after having retired from the Navy and taken employment with the Carnegie Steel Co., for a time kept his desk in the Bureau of Ordnance at the Navy Department. Lieut. J. F. Meigs resigned from the Navy and went into the employment of the Bethlehem Iron Co.

The most deeply involved of all was Commander William M. Folger, former Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance. He was many times in the employment of the armor and projectile concerns, receiving both salary and blocks of stock. He was employed by the Gatling Gun Co. as their European agent for two years on a salary; by the Simonds Rolling Machine Co. for about six months, in London, his expenses being paid and an interest in the business given him in the shape of stock in the company, which was profitable and paid good dividends. He was also mechanical adviser, on a salary, for the American Projectile Co.

Commander Folger's connection with the Harvey Steel Co. was severely criticized. After assisting and advising the Harvey Steel Co. in many ways while Chief of Ordnance and negotiating contracts as Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance with the Harvey Co., Commander Folger resigned as Chief of Ordnance and became an employee of the Harvey Steel Co., meanwhile, however, also receiving a salary of $2,300 from the Government. Folger's salary from the Harvey Co. was to be $5,000 a year, and he was given $20,000 worth of stock in the Harvey Co., which stock paid 20 per cent dividends from its receipts from the United States Government alone.

Commander Folger testified that while he was Chief of Ordnance he had many offers to go into the employment of the steel and armor companies, including offers from the Carnegie Steel Co. and the Bethlehem Iron Co., the only two firms manufacturing armor at that time.

In accepting the following offer from the Harvey Steel Co. Commander Folger accepted the offer of the firm to which he had given the most valuable service while Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

HARVEY STEEL CO.,
No. 52 Wall Street, New York, December 28, 1892.

Commander WM. M. FOLGER.

MY DEAR SIR: I am instructed by the board of directors of this company to invite you to accept the office of consulting engineer to our company on ordnance and armor plate and such other matters as may come under our patents whenever you are at liberty to so act.

We shall be happy to meet you then and arrange the terms with you.

Yours, very truly,

H. A. HARVEY,
President of the Harvey Steel Co.

When Hilary A. Herbert became Secretary of the Navy and heard of Folger's connection with the Harvey Co. he recalled him to active service. Commander Folger was retired as rear admiral June 30, 1905, and therefore is now, and has been for the last 10 years, receiving $6,000 a year from the Government as a retired rear admiral.

Relative to the custom of Army and Navy officials to take employment with private firms Commander Folger testified as follows (54th Cong., S. Rept. 1453, p. 338, hearings):

Senator MCMILLAN. Was it not and is it not customary in the Navy for officers to obtain leave of absence and to take employment from companies outside?

Mr. FOLGER. Very generally so.

Senator MCMILLAN. And so it is in the Army?

Mr. FOLGER. So it has been in the Army.

Senator MCMILLAN. I have known several cases of that kind.

Mr. FOLGER. They are so employed very often.

In these same hearings (p. 454) Charles M. Schwab, then vice president and general manager of the Carnegie Steel Co., now president of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, gave some illuminating testimony on the subject of the absence of honest competition between the only two armor concerns in the United States at that time—Carnegie and Bethlehem:

Senator BLACKBURN. Is there any competition in the price of armor in this country as between yourselves and the Bethlehem Co.?

Mr. SCHWAB. No, sir; assuredly not. We have always had an understanding in that matter. We (Carnegie) never take a contract that we do not consult with the Bethlehem about it.

Senator BLACKBURN. I asked if there is competition?

Mr. SCHWAB. No, sir; there is no competition. I want to be quite fair on that point.

These same hearings (pp. 155 and 353) brought out the fact that former Secretary of the Navy B. F. Tracy, after having made a large contract as Secretary of the Navy with the Carnegie Co., without advertisement or any attempt to obtain competitive bidding, entered the employ of both the Carnegie Co. and the Harvey Co. as counsel.

BIG EXODUS OF ARMY OFFICERS TO MUNITIONS PLANTS SINCE OUTBREAK OF EUROPEAN WAR.

I do not pretend to know the number of ex Army and Navy officers now connected with munitions manufacturers. There are more of such instances to-day, I believe, than at any time in the history of the Government. A very considerable amount of the munitions that are going to the allies from the United States is being made under the supervision of ex-officers of the American Army and Navy, who have resigned their official positions to take employment at two, three, four, or more times their former salaries.

This exodus from the ranks of the best-trained officers of the Army was permitted by the War Department, the officials of which take the ground that it is to the interest of the Government to have highly trained men in the plants of the private manufacturers which may be called upon in the emergency of war, but which, however, also have dealings with the Government in time of peace.

The policy of the War Department is in a measure in conflict with the opinion of the report of the United States Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, which in 1896–97 investigated the armor industry and found so many retired naval officials in the employ of the armor manufacturers.

The naval bill which became a law June 10, 1896, prohibited any naval officer on the active or retired list from taking employment with concerns having dealings with the Government. The provision reads as follows:

And provided further, That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps, on the active or retired list, while such officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date.

There is, however, no similar legislation with reference to Army officers, the absence of which makes possible instances like that of Gen. Humphrey, who is on the pay roll of both the Du Pont Powder Co. and the Government.

On the subject of retired naval officers taking employment with concerns having dealings with the Government, the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, following its discovery of a great deal of this practice in 1896–97, had the following to say in its report made to the Senate on February 11, 1897 (S. Rept. 1453, 54th Cong., 2d sess.):

No man can well serve two masters, and if contractors having large dealings with a department of the Government can take into their employment, with no limit as to compensation, officials of that department, and through them learn the secrets and the purposes of the department, and, moreover, insidiously influence its action, great injury may result to the public service. The fundamental principle upon which all legitimate business is transacted—that each side shall be represented solely by persons wholly devoted to its own interests—is viciously violated by a custom which allows one side to take into its pecuniary employment a representative of the other side.

An effort was made in the debate to draw a distinction between officers on the active list and officers on the retired list. The committee deny that any well-founded distinction exists which ought to influence the decision of the question. Retired officers of the Navy remain officers to all intents and purposes, with an important exception. Section 1462 of the Revised Statutes provides that "no officer on the retired list of the Navy shall be employed on active duty except in time of war."

But notwithstanding this statute exempts retired officers from all obligation to render any service for the liberal retired pay which they receive for life, amounting usually to three-fourths of their active duty pay, yet they remain a part of the Navy of the United States, available in any emergency of war. They are entitled to wear their uniforms on public occasions and are allowed free access to every bureau of the Navy Department, on the theory that they are still ready to serve the interests of the Government by fidelity, sound advice, and an earnest spirit of devotion to public duty. It is quite enough to allow such officers to enter into ordinary private employment for compensation. To permit them to take sides against the Government and to enter into the employ of contractors having dealings with the Government reaching to millions of dollars will certainly, if the custom continues, become most pernicious and injurious to the public interests. Proclaim that such officers may be so employed by repealing the clause which has now become a law, and a bold and wealthy contractor, willing to spend enough money to take into his employ a sufficient number of naval officers on the active and retired list, would be able thoroughly to weaken the department in its dealings with such contractor and to put the Government at his mercy in making bargains, which would be substantially entered into with the representatives of one side alone conducting all the negotiations.

Personally I do not believe that either the War or Navy Departments should accept the resignations of officers who desire to enter employment with concerns having dealings with the Government. Army and Navy officers are but human, and if they know that by winning the favor of private war trafficking firms they may be taken into their employment at two, three, or four times their present salaries they are not likely to be as insistent upon holding out for all that the public is entitled to as they would otherwise be. In a few words, this policy places a premium upon serving the interest of the war trading firms instead of serving the interest of their employers, the American taxpayers, who have paid for their special training and are entitled to the full benefit thereof.

Furthermore, the basis of the policy of accepting resignations under the conditions noted is the assumption that the Government is going to continue to give the maximum amount of contracts for war materials to private plants and manufacture the minimum amount in Government arsenals, navy yards, and shipbuilding plants.

I believe this assumption is entirely erroneous. I realize full well, however, that the great majority of the Army and Navy officials view the proposition of complete Government manufacture of war materials with derision and contempt and that this view is fully shared by those Army and Navy journals that rely upon the advertising of the great war trafficking firms for their principal revenue. But unless I mistake the temper of the American people, the days of the war traffickers are numbered. That great giant, public sentiment, is slow to act, but if I read the signs aright, the giant has already begun to stir. Once aroused, the sentiment of the American people is bigger and stronger even than the forces of the war traffickers, and these forces are strong, for they have behind them every last ounce of the strength of big business and special privilege. In fact, the war traffickers are big business and special privilege combined, supported by the sentiment of the naval and military aristocracy.

Government manufacture of war munitions is coming—coming with a seven-league-boot stride, and gaining impetus every hour. This movement was slow in starting, but it will ultimately bowl over all the obstructions and obstructionists that are in its path. The masses are long suffering. Already they have suffered too long, and their temper now will not permit of long delay. Unless this Nation should be plunged in war and attention diverted, the policy of Government manufacture is not far away, so let us retain our Army and Navy officers who have been specially trained in the manufacture of munitions of war to take charge of Government plants.

GOVERNMENT BY WAR TRAFFICKERS FOR WAR TRAFFICKERS.

I believe that as long as the American people permit private profit and private graft to remain in the war-trafficking industry there is bound to be more or less government by the war traders. No matter how vigilant the people may be, and the people as a mass are not at all vigilant in matters of this kind, the war traders will manage to get their friends into those offices which come into direct or indirect contact with the war-trading business. There is no practical way of knowing whether an official does or does not own stock in war-trafficking firms. He may hold stock in the name of a relative or a friend.

The Army and Navy Journal, which is read chiefly by Army and Navy officers, regularly carries advertisements of stock-brokerage firms which make a specialty of powder, munitions, and ordnance stocks. Here is a sample which I clipped from the Army and Navy Journal, August 7, 1915, page 1572:

Is it reasonable that the stock brokers would pay to have an advertisement of this character published week after week if there were no returns? One broker advertised that he made "a specialty of handling the Army and Navy trade."

Where there are huge private profits on one side and only principle on the other, as in this case, private profits will, in most cases, take the precedence. If the people wish to insure themselves against all form of government by armor plate, cannon, and munitions makers, there is but one way they can do it, and that is by taking private profit out of war and preparation for war by having the Government manufacture its own materials for the Army and Navy.

The profits of the munitions trade are greatest in war, and therefore it is to their interest to have nations at war. The more war, the more profits.

Behind the war trust is the most powerful group of men in the United States, if not in the world. Its control is in the hands of the same group of money kings that rule the insurance companies, the great banks, express companies, telegraph companies, railroads, and steamship lines. To realize the colossal power of the capitalists behind the steel, armor, ammunition, and shipbuilding companies and recall the desperate ends to which more than one investigation has revealed they will go to satisfy their sordid greed for gold, and then to contemplate that the United States in war means more in dollars to this group than the United States in peace, is enough to justify the most optimistic man to tremble for the peace of this patriotic and Christian people.

And if war should come, what a monstrous proposition it would be which would require one group of citizens to go to war and sacrifice their lives for the State while another and smaller group—the war traffickers principally responsible for the war—remained at home becoming immensely rich.

Nationalization of the manufacture of munitions would undoubtedly have prevented the present strained relations with Germany. The cause of the strained relations is that Germany is sinking ships. Germany has been sinking ships principally to prevent American-made ammunition from reaching her enemies. Thus, in order that a comparatively few may make private profit, the peace of 100,000,000 is placed in jeopardy.

It is to the interest of only the few to leave profit in war and preparation for war, while it is to the interest of the entire earth's population to take it out.

STEEL.

The following are the steel companies which have representation in the Navy League:

1. United States Steel Corporation, represented through J. P. Morgan, director of Navy League and United States Steel; Robert Bacon, director of Navy League and United States Steel; Elbert H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and chairman of the board of directors and chairman finance committee United States Steel; Henry C. Frick, honorary vice president Navy League and director United States Steel; George F. Baker, jr., contributor to Navy League and son of director of United States Steel. The late J. P. Morgan was a founder, contributor, and director of the Navy League and the organizer and a director of United States Steel. Charles M. Schwab, who is shown in Moody's Manual for 1903 as then president of United States Steel, is shown by the official journal of the Navy League for 1903 to have been one of the founders of the league in July of the same year.

2. Bethlehem Steel Corporation, represented through Charles M. Schwab, one of the founders of the Navy League and president of Bethlehem, which controls the San Francisco Dry Dock Co., the Union Iron Works Dry Dock Co. of San Francisco, the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation, and the Titusville Forge Co. Bethlehem is also represented in the Navy League through Allan A. Ryan, contributor to the Navy League and director of Bethlehem; George R. Sheldon, honorary vice president of the Navy League and director of Bethlehem; Charles F. Brooker, a former honorary vice president of the Navy League and stockholder of Bethlehem. The above held stock in Bethlehem on September 27, 1915, as follows: Charles M. Schwab, 38,451 shares; Allan A. Ryan & Co., 13,910. Charles F. Brooker held 474 shares on April 10, 1915. Robert H. Sayre, a former general manager of Bethlehem, was a life member of the Navy League, and Lieut. J. F. Meigs, resigned, an employee of Bethlehem, was a life member.

3. Carnegie Steel Co., represented through those connected with the United States Steel Corporation, of which it is an underlying company, and was also represented before its connection with United States Steel through ex-Secretary of the Navy Benjamin F. Tracy, attorney for the Carnegie Co. and one of the founders of the Navy League, and indirectly through Albert B. Boardman and James R. Soley, who were associated with Mr. Tracy.

4. Harvey Steel Co., represented through S. S. Palmer, one of the founders of the Navy League and president of the Harvey Co., and through ex-Secretary Tracy, who was also the attorney for Harvey Co. The Harvey Co. was therefore also indirectly represented through Mr. Boardman and Mr. Soley.

5. Lackawanna Steel Co., represented through Beekman Winthrop, director of Lackawanna and director of the Navy League, and through Ogden L. Mills, contributor to the Navy League and director of Lackawanna. James Speyer, life member of Navy League, was until recently a director of Lackawanna.

6. Cambria Steel Co., represented until recently by E. T. Stotesbury, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. Mr. Stotesbury was a director of Cambria and honorary vice president of the Navy League.

7. Midvale Steel Co., one of the founders of the Navy League.

8. Eastern Steel Co., represented through Harry Payne Whitney, one of the founders of the Navy League and director of Eastern Steel.

9. Pennsylvania Steel Co., represented through E. T. Stotesbury, member of firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., honorary vice president of the Navy League, and director of Pennsylvania Steel.

10. Pacific Hardware & Steel Co., represented through D. H. Kane, life member of Navy League and formerly director Pacific Hardware & Steel Co.

11. Federal Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and president and director of Federal Steel.

12. Illinois Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Illinois Steel.

13. Minnesota Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Minnesota Steel.

14. Union Steel Co., represented through E. H. Gary, contributor to Navy League and director of Union Steel.

15. American Steel & Wire Co., New Jersey, underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

16. Union Steel Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

17. National Steel Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

18. National Tube Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

19. American Tin Plate Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

20. American Sheet Steel Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

21. Lake Superior Consolidated Iron Mines Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

22. Shelby Steel Tube Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

23. Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co., underlying property of United States Steel Corporation. (See United States Steel.)

COPPER.

Robert M. Thompson, founder, honorary vice president 1903–1909, director 1904–1914, chairman executive committee 1913–14, president Navy League 1915: President Orford Copper Co.

Andrew Fletcher, jr., member W. & A. Fletcher Co., life members Navy League: Director Union Copper Co.

William A. Clark, director Navy League 1914–15: President and director United Verde Copper Co.

Cleveland H. Dodge, life member Navy League: Director Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Co.; vice president and director Detroit Copper Mining Co.; director Moctezuma Copper Co.; vice president Phelps, Dodge & Co.

J. H. Harding, contributor to Navy League: Director Amalgamated Copper Co.

A. C. James, life member Navy League: Vice president and director Burro Mountain Copper Co.; vice president and director Copper Queen Consolidated Mining Co.; vice president and director Moctezuma Copper Co.; director Detroit Copper Mining Co. of Arizona.

E. Meyer, jr., contributor to Navy League: Director Braden Copper Mines Co.; director Inspiration Consolidated Copper Co.; director Utah Copper Co.

ZINC, LEAD, AND BRASS.

E. T. Stotesbury, honorary vice president Navy League 1915: Director Riverside Metal Co.

W. J. Matheson, contributor to Navy League: President and director Matheson Lead Co.

A. C. James, life member: Director American Brass Co.

Charles F. Brooker, honorary vice president 1909: President and director American Brass Co.

Rodolphe Agassiz, honorary vice president 1915: Director United Zinc & Chemical Co.

S. S. Palmer, founder: President and director Empire Zinc Co.; treasurer and director Mineral Point Zinc Co.; president and director New Jersey Zinc Co.

H. W. Hayden, contributing member: President and director Manhattan Brass Co.

Myron T. Herrick, honorary vice president 1903–1909, 1915: Director United Zinc & Chemical Co.

Cleveland H. Dodge, life member of Navy League: Director American Brass Co.

NICKEL.

Seward Prosser, contributor to Navy League: Director International Nickel Co.

Robert M. Thompson, president Navy League 1915, founder, honorary vice president 1903–1909, director 1904–1914: Chairman board International Nickel Co.

COAL AND MINING.

Benjamin F. Tracy, founder; president, 1903–4; director, 1903–1907; honorary vice president, 1907: Director Cornucopia Mines of Oregon, director Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.

Allen S. Apgar, life member; treasurer, 1903–4; director, 1903–4: Director Oatka Mining Co.

Robert M. Thompson, president 1915; contributed $1,000 June 10, 1915; founder; honorary vice president, 1903–1909; director, 1904–1914: Director Massey Station Mining Co.

Charles M. Schwab, founder of Navy League: Director American Mining Co., director Minnesota Iron Co., director Montgomery-Shoshone Consolidated Mining Co.

Harry Payne Whitney, founder of Navy League: Director Western Mining Co.

Levi P. Morton, life member, honorary vice president, 1909: Director Panama Coal Co.

E. D. Morgan, life member: President and director Candelaria Mining Co., director Phillipsburg Coal & Land Co.

Thomas H. Hubbard, life member, honorary vice president 1909: Director Acadia Coal Co., vice president and director Lookout Fuel Co.

Frederic deP. Foster, life member: President and director Miller Mining & Smelting Co.

W. & A. Fletcher Co., life members: W. Fletcher is treasurer and director Consolidated Iron Works, A. Fletcher is vice president and director Consolidated Iron Works.

W. R. Addicks, contributing member; director, 1912–1914: Director National Coal & Coke Co.

Thomas W. Stiles, contributing member: Director Low Moor Iron Co. of Virginia.

Timothy L. Woodruff, founder: Treasurer and director Oatka Mining Co.

S. S. Palmer, founder: Director Bertha Mineral Co., president and director McDonald Land & Mining Co.

Rodolphe Agassiz, honorary vice president 1915: Vice president and director Calumet & Hecla Mining Co.; director Gratiot Mining Co.; director Ashburton Mining Co.; director Smuggler Union Mining Co.; director Allouez Mining Co.; president and director Ahmeek Mining Co.; director Lake Milling, Smelting & Refining Co.; president and director Lake Superior Smelting Co.; vice president and director Laurium Mining Co.; president and director Osceola Consolidated Mining Co.; president and director Seneca Mining Co.; president and director Tamarack Mining Co.

Albert B. Boardman, contributing member: Director Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co.

Charles T. Barney, honorary vice president 1905–1907: Director Chihuahua Mining Co.; director Helena Mining Co.

August Belmont, honorary vice president 1909, 1915: Director Golden Reward Consolidated Gold Mining & Milling Co.

Charles F. Brooker, honorary vice president 1909: Director International Refining & Smelting Co.; director United States Smelting, Refining & Mining Co.

G. F. Baker, jr., contributed $1,000 June 10, 1915: Director Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Coal Co.

L. L. Clarke, contributed $250 June 10, 1915: First vice president and director New York & Honduras Rosario Mining Co.

Cleveland H. Dodge, life member: Director Commercial Mining Co.; director Dawson Railway & Coal Co.; director Lackawanna Iron & Coal Co.; director New Mexico Railway & Coal Co.; vice president and director United Globe Mines.

THE NINETEEN FOUNDERS.

I have already called attention to the fact that on page 32 of the February, 1904, issue of the Navy League Journal, the "official organ of the Navy League," 19 names are published as being those of the "founders" of the league. The names there listed are as follows:

Herbert L. Satterlee.
J. W. Miller.
J. Pierpont Morgan.
Benjamin F. Tracy.
Seth Low.
Clement A. Griscom.
Thomas Lowry.
Timothy L. Woodruff.
Midvale Steel Co.
Anson Phelps Stokes.
George Westinghouse.
R. S. Sloan.
John J. Astor.
R. M. Thompson.
Charles M. Schwab.
John J. McCook.
Harry Payne Whitney.
George B. Satterlee.
S. S. Palmer.

MIDVALE STEEL SHOULD BE DESIGNATED PATRIOT NO. 1.

In lists of "founders" subsequently published in the Navy League's publications from time to time the name of the Midvale Steel Co. was omitted. Perhaps such prominent mention was embarrassing.

As to whether "preparedness" has been profitable to this particular founder of the Navy League, and as to whether the Navy League's proposed $500,000,000 bond issue for battleships, and so forth, would be increasingly profitable the official records of the Navy Department itself will be submitted.

The following is a complete record of the Midvale Co.'s sales of armor plate to Uncle Sam since 1902, but does not include other materials sold to the Army and Navy:

Year.	Tons.	Cost.	Average per ton.
1903	6,180	$2,453,422	$396.99
1905	1,041	411,972	395.74
1906	3,690	1,276,363	345.89
1907	2,259	941,020	416.56
1909	3,128	1,312,706	419.66
1909	3,786	1,597,756	422.02
1911	2,274	970,349	426.71
1911	2,202	957,985	435.05
1912	5,189	2,218,656	427.57
1913	2,723	1,262,645	463.70
1913	7,739	3,462,760	447.44
1914	8,128	3,487,664	429.09
1915	60	22,560	376.00
	48,399	20,375,858	420.99

NOTE.—The average cost per ton given is average of the prices per ton of the various classes of armor and not the price per ton of any one class.

CHARLES M. SCHWAB, PATRIOT NO. 2.

Another name in this list that smacks of war trafficking is that of Charles M. Schwab. Mr. Schwab was named as one of the founders of the Navy League in the first issue of the Navy League Journal ever published, the issue for July, 1903. Mr. Schwab was at that time president of the United States Steel Corporation, owner of the Carnegie Steel Co. Some of his fellow directors of the steel corporation at that time were J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, Henry H. Rogers, Henry C. Frick, and Elbert H. Gary. Previous to the formation of the United States Steel Corporation Mr. Carnegie had been president of the Carnegie Steel Co.

Mr. Schwab also became connected as indicated with the following concerns:

Director American Mining Co.
Director American Steel & Wire Co.
Director Bethlehem Steel Co.
President and chairman board of directors Bethlehem Steel Corporation.
Director Carnegie Steel Co.
Director Chicago, Lake Shore & Eastern Railroad.
Director Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co.
Director Duluth & Iron Range Railroad Co.
Director Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Railroad Co.
Director H. C. Frick Coke Co.

Director Huron Water Co.
Director Illinois Steel Co.
Director Masontown & New Salem Railroad.
Director Minnesota Iron Co.
Director Mount Pleasant Water Co.
Director National Tube Co., Ohio.
Director National Tube Works Co.
Trustee New York Trust Co.
Director Southwest Connecting Railway.
Director Trotter Water Co.
Director United States Coal & Coke Co.
Director United States Realty & Improvement Co.
Director Youghiogheny Northern Railway Co.
Director Youghiogheny Water Co.
Director American Locomotive Co.
Director American Universal Mill Co.
Director Empire Trust Co.
Director Lehigh Valley Transit Co.
Director Montgomery-Shoshone Consolidated Mining Co.

Mr. Schwab is now president and chairman of the board of directors of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, one of the largest war-trafficking firms in the world, the common stock of which, as a result of war orders, jumped from $40 at the outbreak of the European war to nearly $600. The Bethlehem Corporation controls the San Francisco Dry Dock Co. and the Union Iron Works Dry Dock Co. of San Francisco, the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., Harlan & Hollingsworth Corporation, and the Titusville Forge Co.

Bethlehem has obtained more contracts for armor plate from the United States Government than any other firm, a complete record of its orders for the single item of armor plate being as follows:

Year.	Tons.	Cost.	Average per ton.
1887	6,891	$4,168,000	$604.85
1893	3,882	2,510,000	646.41
1896	2,800	1,534,272	547.96
1898	3,965	1,586,000	400.00
1899	1,142	456,800	400.00
1900	18,588	7,684,700	413.42
1903	5,798	2,386,440	411.60
1903	5,372	2,239,640	416.91
1905	4,950	2,038,780	411.13
1906	1,824	630,813	345.84

NOTE.—The average cost per ton given is average of the prices per ton of the various classes of armor and not the price per ton of any one class.

ARMOR BLOWHOLE FRAUDS PERPETRATED ON THE GOVERNMENT BY THE CARNEGIE CO.

Becoming a founder of the Navy League is not the only way in which Charles M. Schwab has demonstrated the quality of his "patriotism." His devotion to his Government is described at considerable length in a certain musty Government document stored away in the archives of Congress. It is styled "Violation of Armor Plate Contracts," and is known as House of Representatives Report No. 1468, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

The report followed an investigation in 1894 by the House Committee on Naval Affairs of charges against the Carnegie Steel Co., then Carnegie, Phipps & Co. The evidence of fraud upon the Government by the Carnegie company was large and convincing. The testimony showed that armor plates containing "blowholes" were palmed off on the Government and later used on battleships of the American Navy; that these cavities were secretly "plugged" and kept "concealed" from the Government inspectors.

Mr. Schwab, one of the founders of the Navy League, was general superintendent of the Carnegie company when this fraudulent work was done. When questioned concerning the plugging of blowholes, Mr. Schwab said (p. 647):

Q. Do you know whether the company did really conceal the fact of blowholes in the plate?—A. I think likely that was done.

Asked if he gave orders that the defects in the plates be concealed from the Government inspectors, Mr. Schwab replied that he did not give orders that the defects be concealed, but added:

I certainly gave orders that blowholes should not reject the plate.

Again (p. 649), Mr. Schwab testified:

Q. Do you know of any case where they were plugged and filled without the knowledge of the Government inspector?—A. I do not, but I believe it was done.

Another superintendent of the works, W. A. Cline, testified that he almost invariably changed the figures so that false reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made to the Government inspectors; that he discharged some of the workmen because they told the truth about this fraudulent work.

William E. Corey, now president of the Midvale Steel & Ordnance Co. and a director of Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co., was shown to be in charge of the armor plant in which the frauds were committed. He testified that the tensile strength of each plate was stretched so as to increase their apparent tensile strength without the knowledge of the inspectors of the Government; that he knew false specimens were substituted for the plates selected by the Government inspectors, but he considered it "a matter of small importance"; that plates selected by the Government inspectors for physical and ballistic tests were retreated before the tests were made and without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. This fraud led the inspectors to believe all the armor was as good as the specially treated plates secretly made after they had been selected for making tests.

Here is an extract from the testimony of the then Superintendent Corey:

Q. Did you ever know of plugging being done without the knowledge of any of the inspectors?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you specify the time and what plate it was?—A. No; I can not; I did not keep a record of it.

Mr. T. F. Van Kirk, a workman, testified that on April 11 and 12, 1892, a plate, x–9, 13 inches, was—plugged and hammered up. Forty holes in top and bottom of plate. This plate was afterwards finished, stamped x–8, 13 inches, April 23 and 24, 1892. Holes in top of plate run in wire 4 feet or more. The material in this plate was very bad, and in trying to plug the plugs would fall in, but we finally doctored it up and it passed inspection.

In an affidavit Samuel Sheriff says:

The plugging and doctoring of plates was generally done at night, when no inspectors were about, but I seen one fixed one day at noon.

Mr. T. F. Farley, another workman, testified in an affidavit that—the plates were frequently imperfect, were full of deep holes and defects; frequently taken off the planer in the daytime and hidden or covered up until night so as not to be seen by the inspectors, and then worked upon in the nighttime. I have seen these defective plates passed, inspected, and shipped from the works to their destination.

Mr. G. W. Kountz says in his affidavit:

I have known of heavy plates being plugged of holes from 4 to 6 inches, unknown to the Government inspectors. This fraud has been practiced upon the Government since long before November, 1892, and since September, 1893.

Mr. T. F. Farley says in his testimony:

When I first went there they were plugged by taking cuttings from the same plates, * * * hammering them in with a punch, and placing more and more in the hole until it was level, until it could stand no more plugging. I have run wires in to the depth of 18 inches into these plates, and I know that plates that I run a wire in 18 inches passed and is now somewhere.

The documents pertaining to the investigation, as well as the testimony, indicate that it was believed by the officials that Mr. Schwab was in a large measure responsible for the frauds against the Government.

When Superintendent Corey was testifying he was asked (p. 559):

Q. Did anybody above you—did any superior officer—know that you were doing this thing?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who was it?—A. Mr. Schwab knew about it in a general way.
Q. Did anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Following the discovery of the frauds the management of the armor-plate factory was removed from the jurisdiction of Schwab.

Secretary of the Navy H. A. Herbert considered this action of such importance that he mentioned it in a report made to Congress on March 26, 1894, covering the frauds, as follows:

The department is informed that Superintendent Schwab has, since the transactions complained of, been removed from all connection and authority over the armor department at Homestead, except so far as concerns the erection of new plant.

Testifying on July 6, 1894, Schwab stated he no longer had jurisdiction over the armor plant.

Q. Was your position changed at your own request?—A. No.

In making its report of the investigation the House Committee on Naval Affairs stated that "the fraud has been traced home to their general superintendent, himself a stockholder in the company."

The "general superintendent" was Charles M. Schwab.

The report then proceeded, as follows, to take the measure of the patriotism of those responsible for the fraud:

CRIMINALITY OF THE CARNEGIE COMPANY.

If the criminality of a wrongful act is to be measured by the deliberation with which it is committed, the magnitude of the evils likely to result from its perpetration, and the want of provocation with which it is done, the frauds which your committee have found are worthy to be called crimes. The servants of the Carnegie Steel Co. (whether with or without the knowledge of the company), to increase their gains, deliberately continued for many months to commit acts whose natural and probable consequence would be the sacrifice of the lives of our seamen in time of war, and with them, perhaps, the dearest interests of the Nation.

The company were hired to make the best possible armor plate and paid an enormous price for so doing. They were hired to make an armor that would stand the shots of an enemy and upon which the Nation might rely in time of need. They were paid between $500 and $700 a ton and thousands of dollars a plate for so doing. Resting under these obligations the company or its servants have perpetrated manifold frauds, the natural tendency of which was to palm off upon the Government an inferior armor, whose inferiority might perchance appear only in the shock of battle and with incalculable damage to the country.

No fine or mere money compensation is an adequate atonement for such wrongs. The commission of such frauds is a moral crime of the gravest character. Your committee do not consider it as within their province to draft a criminal statute; but they do feel under obligation to call the attention of the House to the importance of protecting in the future the interests of the Treasury, the lives of our seamen, and the safety of the Nation by appropriate legislation, denouncing as crimes all such acts of fraud and deception practiced upon the Government in connection with armor plate and other material of war, and making such acts severally punishable in all persons who commit them or aid and abet their commission.

Philander C. Knox, general counsel for the Carnegie Steel Co., who later became Attorney General of the United States, and later Secretary of State, vigorously protested to President Cleveland against the assessment of any damages. Secretary of the Navy Herbert reported to Congress that "it was strenuously and ingenuously argued by the counsel for the Carnegie Co." that no right to exact penalties existed.

President Cleveland assessed damages of $140,000 against the Carnegie Co., which were immediately paid. The fact that the Carnegie Co. defrauded the Government did not appear to impair in the least its standing with the Navy Department.

Although the armor-plate factory had been taken from the jurisdiction of Mr. Schwab the armor-plate scandal itself evidently did not impair the confidence of the directors of the Carnegie Co. in Mr. Schwab, for he was made president of the Carnegie Co. Then the Carnegie Co. was absorbed by the United States Steel Corporation, and Mr. Schwab became president of this corporation. Then he went over to the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and since he has been president of the latter concern it has been charged by workmen in the Bethlehem plant that frauds were being perpetrated upon the Government, just as they were when Mr. Schwab was general superintendent of the Carnegie Co.

FRAUDS CONTINUE TO PRESENT TIME, IS BELIEF.

Representative HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, one of the best-known and most courageous Members of the House, has devoted considerable time to the subject of defective gun forgings palmed off on the Government by the ammunition ring. He expresses the conviction that these frauds are being perpetrated upon the Government even to this day. I quote from his speech delivered in the Sixty-first Congress:

In order to show that the frauds continue to this day I have original affidavits made within the last few months up here at Bethlehem, and I send them to the Clerk's desk and ask that they be read now in my time.

The following are the affidavits referred to:

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 26, 1910.

I, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the following information is an absolute fact, as I have been an employee of the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the treatment department for a period of one and one-half years.

After official tests on 12-inch liners, tubes, and long propeller shafts for U. S. S. Florida there was a heat treatment given above forgings while the inspectors were at home at night; for instance, if a tube, liner, or shaft passes test to-day, instead of shipping same forging into the machine shop for machining they put forging into a wood furnace and heat it at 860°, which is equal to 1,000° or more in oil furnace, thereby softening the forging, and the following morning have same piece ready for machine shop after straightening (which should have been done before official test bars were taken). This was not, of course, done with all tubes, liners, and shafts, but it was done in cases where the company needed any individual forging to complete a set of gun forgings in order to get out a certain amount of work to reach their tonnage basis, so as to make their annual bonus. One of the most prominent features of the superintendents and overseers of the company is to produce as much tonnage as possible, regardless of whether or not work is accomplished in a manner which gave the Government an inferior product.

The United States Government specifications require all treatment reports to be forwarded to the Army and Navy office at works where work is being done, but this rule was not lived up to on the part of the company, as I myself was instructed by the superintendent to withhold the report of tubes, liners, and shafts from the Army and Navy office; therefore the inspectors never knew about the treatment that was given after the official test.

I also wish to state that during the month of December, 1909, there was more of this defective work done than any month previous, to the best of my knowledge.

The records that were supposed to be open for public inspection were always so fixed that they would not show the fraudulent treatments that were given forgings, and the reports that I got about treatments on tubes, liners, and shafts were withheld from the public records that were supposed to be open for scrutiny of Army and Navy inspectors.

WILLIAM JULIAN.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 26th day of April, 1910.

[SEAL.] JOSEPH H. MCGEE,
Justice of the Peace.

My commission expires first Monday in May, 1912.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., April 29, 1910.

This is to certify that I know there was work done in No. 2 machine shop for the United States Government that was not up to specifications, I myself have deceived the inspector many a time.

On the last lot of 5-inch mounts that were made here a number of patches were placed on the brackets, to cover up a mistake in machining. These were put on in such a way that under ordinary inspection they could not be detected.

I know of a slide for a 12-inch gun that was being machined when a blowhole was discovered. The yoke was taken off the machine and at night the hole was filled up with metal and the yoke put back on the machine, the inspector not discovering the trick. I know of a track for a 12-inch turret which, while being machined, was found to be cracked.

I closed the crack by hammering the crack shut and finished machining it.

COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON, State of Pennsylvania, ss:

Francis J. Gillespie, the subscriber, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that the foregoing statement is true and correct as he verily believes.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 29th day of April, 1910.

Justice of the Peace.

My commission expires first Monday in May, 1912.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, April 29, 1910.

In a brief submitted to President Taft on April 6 by the committee of striking employees of the Bethlehem Steel Co. we charged that during the night, when Government inspectors were not present, workmen were compelled to treat, patch, and weld inferior work so that work could be forced to be accepted by the Government.

In a letter from Mr. G. von L. Meyer, Secretary of the Navy, to the President, under date of April 21, 1910, of which I have a copy, he states that our charge has been investigated. In his letter he states that "it appears that no evidence in support of this can be obtained, and the inspectors claim that should defective work be treated in this manner it would subsequently be detected on inspection and test, and reports indicate that the Government is fully safeguarded by the daily routine inspection."

He also states: "In general, it is believed that the character of the work accepted upon inspection by the Government fully meets the requirements of the Government, and through the system of inspection now in vogue the interests of the Government are well protected."

Regardless of this report, work was treated at night, and men were not allowed to tell the inspector, and after the work was treated if there was any chance of the inspector being deceived into accepting the work as being up to specifications it was submitted to him. I know that on an order of 5-inch sights for the Navy, about three years ago, that some of these sights were found out of alignment during the company shop test, and that the steel castings were hammered with a sledge to bend them so they would line up. The recoil of the guns, when these sights were used, must have sprung these castings back to their old shape, and thereby made it impossible for our sailors to shoot straight. I offer as witnesses Horace Klinesmith and Robert Johnson, former employees of No. 4 machine shop.

During the building of the 12-inch ammunition hoists for the battleships North Dakota and Delaware a number of buffers, to be used as cushions to take the weight off the lower cars, were found to be not strong enough. The inspector (J. C. Farrall) refused to accept them on the ground that the springs were not firm enough. The foreman (Harry Lynn) promised to put new springs in. The real trouble was that the bore was out of round in the bottom of the castings, and when inspector was home to dinner these buffers were taken apart and filled with thick vaseline, which stopped up the leak and made it appear as though new springs had been put in, and were accepted by the inspector.

I was working as assistant to the inspector, and know this to be a fact. On the same job there were several levers welded by electricity to fill up dirt holes, and were in bad shape, and I put the inspector next to it, and was asked by Foreman George Meyer, of the second floor: "Who the hell told him that?" These levers were thrown out by Inspector Farrall. At the present time there are under construction twenty-four 6-inch howitzer gun carriages and twenty-four 6-inch howitzer limbers upon which much inferior work was done, and up to the time of strike was hid from the inspector. Parts have been broken in flanging and welded with acetylene gas; axles have been machined wrong and patched; other parts machined wrong and doctored up to make it pass inspection. In fact, the idea in the shop is to make the work "appear" as though it is up to specifications, or, in other words, get it past the inspector by fair or foul means. I offer as witnesses Horace Klinesmith, George Stegmair, George Miller, Robert Johnson, Ralph Otto, John Wendling, Henry Doyle, and William Everett. Also, on shells for the Navy, if the center has been drilled too deep, leaving a hole in the nose of the shell instead of a point, the hole is drilled deeper and a pointed plug put in. As this was done when inspector was home, I am sure it was not allowed by inspector. This shell job was kept very secret in shop, and should be thoroughly investigated, as there was a large bonus paid for getting these shells out in a certain time, which acted as an incentive for the men to deceive the inspector. In fact, in No. 4 machine shop the practice of treating inferior workmanship was so common that nothing was thought of it. An investigation where men could be placed on oath would bring to light a great many things which I haven't mentioned. I do not blame the inspectors for this, as it would be impossible for an inspector to detect some of these operations. When it is known that Mr. Everett, a skilled jeweler, is used on some of this work, the impossibility of detecting these things by ordinary inspection is apparent.

DAVID WILLIAMS.

COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON, State of Pennsylvania, ss:

Personally appeared before me, a justice of the peace in and for the aforesaid county, David Williams, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says that the foregoing statements are true and correct, as he verily believes.

Sworn to before me this 29th day of April, A. D. 1910.

[SEAL.] JOSEPH H. MCGEE,
Justice of the Peace.

My commission expires first Monday in May, 1912.

The fact of the continuance of these frauds is evidenced by the frequency with which guns explode on our battleships and on land, killing and maiming men; by the frequency with which boilers on our ships blow up with such awful results to human life.

Guns while being tested by other great nations of the world, do not explode with disastrous results. We do not read in the papers that boilers frequently explode on the war vessels of England or Germany or any other nation. The very large number of these accidents in our own Navy and in tests made by our Army officers leads to the irresistible conclusion that there are defects in the castings of the guns, and in the castings for the steel tubes and boilers furnished by our steel companies. Castings for guns are not made by the Government. They are made at Bethlehem, at Midvale, at the plant of the Carnegie Co., and some of the smaller castings are made by companies not so large as the companies I have mentioned. In our Government arsenals here at Washington and up at Watervliet we simply assemble these castings. I desire to insert here in my speech a chronological record of the more important accidents of this character as recorded in the news items of our metropolitan papers.

DISASTERS CAUSED BY EXPLOSIONS, BURSTING GUNS, FAULTY BREECH BLOCKS, ETC.

1902, February 2. Battleship Kearsarge, West Indian waters; gun burst, killing 5.

1903, January 17. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion off Culebra Islands; 6 killed.

1903, April 9. Battleship Iowa; explosion of gun; 3 killed, 5 wounded.

1904, April 13. Battleship Missouri, off Pensacola, Fla.; explosion; 32 killed.

1904, December 14. Battleship Massachusetts, at Philadelphia; explosion in firerooms; 3 killed, 4 scalded.

1905, July 21. Gunboat Bennington, San Diego, Cal.; boiler explosion; 34 killed, 66 injured.

1906, January 10. Battleship Massachusetts; gun explosion; 9 killed.

1906, April 13. Battleship Kearsarge, in Caribbean Sea; explosion; 6 killed.

1907, July 15. Battleship Georgia, Massachusetts Bay; explosion; 6 killed, 15 injured.

1908, June 5. In California waters, Cruiser Tennessee; bursting of boiler tube; 6 killed.

——, ——. Torpedo-boat destroyer Hopkins, California waters; exploding boiler; 1 killed, 5 wounded.

1910, March 28. Cruiser Charleston, in Philippine waters; gun explosion, alleged faulty breech block; 8 killed, 7 or 8 wounded.

1910, July 21. Explosion of gun, Fort Monroe; 12 killed.

1910, September 9. Battleship North Dakota; explosion, Hampton Roads; 3 killed.

1910, November 19. Explosion of gun, Indianhead; 4 killed.

1911, January 13. Cruiser Washington; cylinder head blown out. Also about this time three similar accidents to vessels in Admiral Schroeder's fleet; no one killed.

1911, January 17. Battleship Delaware; boilers exploded; 9 killed; just outside Hampton Roads.

Total killed in nine years, 147.

Total maimed in nine years, 102.

As a result of the accidents I have enumerated, and there have been others, in nine years 147 men have been killed and 102 maimed for life. In other words, by these accidents, in nine years of profound peace, we have killed or maimed for life more of our men than were killed in action in the Spanish-American War.

J. P. MORGAN, FOUNDER NO. 3.

The Carnegie Steel Co. also had representation in the list of 19 founders above alluded to in the person of the late J. P. Morgan, who was the organizer and a director of United States Steel, which controls the Carnegie Co.

Concerns with which Mr. Morgan was affiliated follow:

Director General Electric Co.
Director United States Steel Corporation.
Director Ætna Insurance Co.
Director Carthage & Adirondack Railway.
Director Central New England Railway Co.
Director Clearwater & Raquette Lake Railroad.
Director Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railway Co.
Director Columbus, Hope & Greensburg Railroad.
Director First National Bank of City of New York.
Director Fulton Chain Railway Co.
Director Fulton Navigation Co.
Director Harlem River & Portchester Railroad.
Director Hartford & Connecticut Western Railroad Co.
Director Jersey City & Bayonne Railroad Co.
Director Lake Erie & Western Railroad Co.
Director Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railroad Co.
Director Madison Square Garden Co.
Director Metropolitan Opera & Real Estate Co.
Director Mexican Telegraph Co.
Director Michigan Central Railroad Co.
Director Mohawk & Malone Railroad Co.
Director National Bank of Commerce.
Director Naugatuck Railroad Co.
Director New England Railroad Co.
Director New Haven & Derby Railroad Co.
Director New Jersey Junction Railroad Co.
Director New Jersey Shore Line Railroad Co.
Director New York & Harlem Railroad Co.
Director New York & Ottawa Railroad Co.
Director New York & Putnam Railroad Co.
Director New York Central & Hudson River Railroad Co.
Director New York, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Co.
Director New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.
Director New York, Ontario & Western Railroad.

Director First Security Co. of City of New York.
Director Fort Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad Co.
Director New England Navigation Co.
Director Newport Trust Co.
Director New York & Northern Railway Co.
Director Ontario, Carbondale & Scranton Railway Co.
Director Port Jervis, Monticello & Summitville Railroad Co.
Director Rhode Island Co. (electric line).
Director Syracuse, Geneva & Corning Railway Co.
Director Terminal Railway of Buffalo.

The Carnegie Steel Co., which had representation in the 1904 list of founders of the Navy League, and is represented now among the directors, life members, and contributors to the Navy League perhaps more than any other one concern, obtained contracts from the Government for armor plate during the last year aggregating $6,829,100. Since 1890 the Carnegie Co. has received orders from the Government for armor plate alone as follows:

Year.	Tons.	Cost.	Average per ton.
1890	6,054	$3,475,000	$574.00
1893	3,120	2,094,000	671.15
1896	3,073	1,697,808	552.50
1898	3,712	1,484,800	400.00
1899	1,134	453,600	400.00
1900	18,588	7,694,700	413.42
1903	5,666	2,333,640	411.87
1904	5,258	2,194,040	417.28
1905	1,921	772,660	402.22
1906	1,865	645,206	345.95
1907	3,538	1,475,110	416.94
1908	3,153	1,333,095	422.80
1909	4,604	1,936,065	420.52
1910	2,207	952,180	431.44
1911	2,323	991,200	426.69
1912	5,132	2,194,572	427.63
1913	2,684	1,236,671	460.76
1915	15,901	6,829,100	429.47
	80,933	39,783,497	442.36

NOTE.—The average cost per ton given is average of the prices per ton of the various classes of armor and not the price per ton of any one class.

In all, the three firms which comprise the armor ring in this country, and all of which are represented among the founders of the Navy League, have drawn down contracts for 233,339 tons of armor plate from the Government, and have charged an average of $439 a ton for it.

If this armor had been manufactured in a Government armor-plate factory, which the Navy League has persistently cold-shouldered, but which logically it should have advocated if wholly sincere in its demands for the largest possible Navy, it is entirely within the bounds of conservatism to say that at least $35,000,000 could have been saved to the American taxpayers. Or, stating it in another way, we could have had for the same expenditure two or three more battleships than we now have.

There have been 10 official estimates as to the cost of armor in a Government plant. The average estimate is $251 a ton. Here is a table reviewing the various estimates.

Year.	Estimator.	Estimated cost.
		"Production cost," or cost in a Government plant.	"Full cost," or cost in outside plants, with private profit added.
1896	Lieut. Commander Rodgers	$297.54	$391.86
	Ensign McVay	243.73	337.29
	Rohrer Board	223.43	324.36
	Secretary of Navy Herbert	224.42	324.41
	Average	247.28	344.48
1906	Commander Rohrbacher	193.08	223.16
	Commander Dieffenbach	241.76	277.73
	Lieut. Galbraith	242.33	298.77
	Investigating board of 1906	244.27	295.89
	Average	230.36	273.89
1914	Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss (3 per cent interest on cost of plant included)	[1] 300.16	[2]
1915	Tillman committee, composed of Senator B. R. Tillman, Representative L. P. Padgett, and Joseph Strauss, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department	[1] 230.11	[2]
	General average	251.97	309.18

[1] Estimate based on cost in plant 20,000 tons yearly capacity. Other estimates based on cost in plant 6,000 tons capacity.
[2] No estimate.

The three armor companies which have a monopoly of the manufacture of armor in the United States, and which concerns are all represented among the 19 founders of the Navy League, are the same concerns to which Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels referred in his report for 1913, as follows:

Without an armor plant of its own the Government in time of war or impending war would be entirely at the mercy of these three manufacturers and obliged to pay practically whatever price they asked. History does not warrant an assumption that the patriotism of these companies would prove superior to their desire for profit, inasmuch as during the time that war with Spain was imminent these companies refused to accept the prices fixed by Congress, after investigation, as a just rate, and declined to manufacture any armor until they got their own price of $100 a ton more than that which Congress had determined on. The love of country possessed by these companies did not prevent them from furnishing armor to Russia, as reported to Congress, in 1894 at $249, while they were charging the United States $616 a ton.

CLEMENT A. GRISCOM.

So far I have mentioned the business connections of but 3 of the 19 founders. Of the others, several of whom are now deceased, I will merely call attention to their business connections at the time of their affiliation with the Navy League.

Clement A. Griscom was a fellow director with J. P. Morgan of the United States Steel Corporation, which controlled the armor-making Carnegie Steel Co. He was also a director of the Wm. Cramp Ship & Engine Building Co. and the Electric Boat Co., both of which are war traders. Mr. Griscom was also a director of the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., Electric Co. of America, Fidelity Trust Co., Bank of North America, Commercial Trust Co., Fourth Street National Bank, Mercantile Trust Co., Long Island Railroad Co., National Transit Co. of New York, Philadelphia & Norfolk Railroad, United Gas Improvement Co., Western Savings Fund Society, and trustee of Atlantic Mutual Insurance Co. He also owned practically all the stock of the Red Star Line, a Belgian corporation; of the International Navigation Co. (Ltd.), of Liverpool, England; and of the Empire Transportation Co., Seattle. Later the name of the International Navigation Co. was changed to the International Mercantile Marine Co., a J. P. Morgan transaction. Capital was increased to $120,000,000 in order to provide means to acquire fleets of the White Star Line, Atlantic Transport Line, Leyland Line, and Dominion Line. Died in 1912.

HERBERT L. SATTERLEE, PATRIOT NO. 5.

Herbert L. Satterlee is a brother-in-law of J. P. Morgan. He was formerly an Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He has been identified with the Navy League in an active way during its entire existence. He was one of the incorporators of the league, founder, and at different times has been director, honorary vice president, chairman executive committee, and at the present time is general counsel of the league. Mr. Satterlee at the time he became a founder of the Navy League was a director of the India Rubber & Gutta-Percha Insulating Co., which manufactures signal cables and submarine, mine, torpedo, and other underground wires and cables, for all of which "preparedness" would create a heavy demand. Mr. Satterlee is now a member of the firm of Satterlee, Canfield & Stone, 49 Wall Street, New York, and is a director of the Marine Safety Appliance Corporation and a trustee of the Habirshaw Wire Co.

GEORGE B. SATTERLEE.

George B. Satterlee, another Navy League founder, died soon after the formation of the league.

COL. ROBERT M. THOMPSON.

Col. Robert M. Thompson has been connected with the Navy League throughout its existence. He has, in addition to being one of the founders, been a director, honorary vice president, chairman of the executive board, and is now the president. He was one of those who contributed $1,000 on June 10, 1915. Col. Thompson is chairman of the board of directors of the International Nickel Co. and president of the New York Metal Exchange, as previously stated.

HARRY PAYNE WHITNEY.

Harry Payne Whitney, at the time he became one of the 19 founders of the Navy League, was a fellow director of the late J. P. Morgan on the National Bank of Commerce, on the Clearwater & Racquette Lake Railroad, on the Fulton Chain Railway, on the Fulton Navigation Co., on the Racquette Lake Railroad Co., and the Newport Trust Co. He was also a director of Electric Storage Battery Co., the Western Mining Co., and the Guggenheim Exploration Co. He married a daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt. Mr. Whitney is now a director of the Guaranty Trust Co., which is the transfer agent for the Westinghouse, American Car & Foundry Co., Atlas Powder Co., and other war-munitions concerns. Henry P. Davison and Thomas W. Lamont, members of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, New York, are fellow directors of Mr. Whitney on the Guaranty Trust Co. Mr. Whitney is also connected in the manner indicated with the following concerns:

Director the Eastern Steel Co.
Director Guggenheim Exploration Co.
Director the Cuba Co.
First vice president and director Long Island Motor Parkway (Inc.).
Director Nassau County Trust Co., of Mineola, N. Y.
Director Nassau Light & Power Co.
President and director Whitney Realty Co.
Director National Bank of Commerce of New York.

BENJAMIN F. TRACY.

Benjamin F. Tracy, another of the 19 founders, was Secretary of the Navy from 1889 to 1893. As Secretary of the Navy Mr. Tracy made contracts with the Carnegie Co. and the Harvey Steel Co., and after his term expired became the attorney for both concerns. Mr. Tracy was a director of the Cornucopia Mines of Oregon and the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Co. Died in 1915.

S. S. PALMER.

S. S. Palmer, 55 Wall Street, New York, another of the 19 founders of the Navy League, was interested in many concerns which would profit from "preparedness." He was president and director of the Harvey Steel Co., a recipient of royalties from all armor plate manufactured here and abroad; president and director of the Empire Zinc Co., Mineral Point Zinc Co., New Jersey Zinc Co., Empire Zinc Co. of Colorado, New Jersey Zinc Co. of Pennsylvania, and a director of the Lackawanna Steel Co., which has received enormous orders from the allies, and the Empire Zinc Co. of Missouri.

Mr. Palmer was also connected with other firms, as follows:
Vice president and director Bertha Mineral Co.
Director Empire Zinc Co. of Missouri.
Trustee Franklin Safe Deposit Co.
Secretary, treasurer, and director Cayuga & Susquehanna Railroad.
Vice president and director Colonial Assurance Co.
Trustee Consolidated Gas Co. of New York.
Vice president and director Detroit, Hillsdale & Southwestern Railroad.
Director East River Gas Co., of Long Island City.
Director Farmers' Loan & Trust Co.
Director Fort Wayne & Jackson Railroad.
President and director Green Bay & Western Railroad.
President and director Iola & Northern Railway.
President and director Kewaunee, Green Bay & Western Railroad.
President and director McDonald Land & Mining Co.
Director National City Bank of New York.
Director New York Edison Co.
Director New York Mutual Gas Light Co.

President and director Palmer Land Co.
President and director Palmer Water Co.
President and director Prime Western Spelter Co.
Director Princeton Bank.
Director Robins Conveying Belt Co.
President and director St. Louis & Hannibal Railway.
Director Tefft Weller Co.
Director United States Improvement Co.
Director Valley Railroad Co.
Died in 1913.

JOHN JACOB ASTOR.

John Jacob Astor was a fellow director of J. P. Morgan on the Western Union Telegraph Co. at the time he became one of the founders of the Navy League. He was connected with other concerns, as follows:

Director Astor National Bank.
Member board of managers Delaware & Hudson Co.
Director Equitable Life Assurance Society of United States.
Director Illinois Central Railroad Co.
Director Mercantile Trust Co.
Director Morton Trust Co.
Director Mutual Bank.
Director National Park Bank.
Trustee New York Life Insurance & Trust Co.
Director Niagara Development Co.
Director Niagara Falls Power Co.
Director Niagara Junction Railroad.
Director Plaza Bank.
Trustee Title Guarantee & Trust Co.
Director Astor Trust Co.
Director Long Island Motor Parkway (Inc.).
Died April 15, 1912.

COL. JOHN J. M'COOK.

Col. John J. McCook, another of the 19 founders, was the senior member of the firm of Alexander & Green, 120 Broadway, New York, counsel for large railroad, financial, insurance, and other corporations. Died in 1911.

GEORGE WESTINGHOUSE.

George Westinghouse, another of the founders of the Navy League, was president of 30 corporations with an aggregate capital of $120,000,000. He was connected with the following concerns:

President and director Cooper-Hewitt Electric Co.
Director Electric Power Securities Co. of Niagara Falls.
Director Electric Properties Co.
President and director Nernst Lamp Co.
President and director Pittsburgh Meter Co.
President and director Security Investment Co.
Chairman board of directors British Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.
President and director Canadian Westinghouse Co.
Director Consolidated Car Heating Co.
President and director East Pittsburgh Improvement Co.
Director Lackawanna & Wyoming Valley Rapid Transit Co.
President and director Sawyer-Man Electric Co.
Chairman board of directors Societe Anonyme Westinghouse.
President and director Union Switch & Signal Co.
President and director Westinghouse Air Brake Co.
Director Westinghouse Brake Co. (Ltd.), London.
Director Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co.
Director Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co.
Director Westinghouse Foundry Co.
Director Westinghouse Machine Co.
President and director Westinghouse Traction Brake Co.
President and director Societa Italiana Westinghouse.
President and director Societe Anonyme Westinghouse, St. Petersburg.
Director Traction & Power Securities Co. (Ltd.), London.
President and director Westinghouse Air Spring Co.
President and director Westinghouse Brake Co. (Ltd.), London.
President and director the Westinghouse Co.
Director Westinghouse Foundry Co.
Mr. Westinghouse died March 12, 1914.

The Westinghouse corporations have profited enormously from war orders. Financial America on August 2, 1915, said:

Actual orders on the books of the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co. now total between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000, and the company also has options on sufficient additional orders to bring the amount up to over $100,000,000.

TIMOTHY L. WOODRUFF.

Timothy L. Woodruff was president and director of the Smith Premier Typewriting Co., and later a director of the Remington Typewriter Co., treasurer and director of the Oatka Mining Co., vice president and director of the Baldwin-Lester Co., trustee of the Hamilton Trust Co., director of the Merchants Exchange National Bank, the Provident Savings Life Assurance Society of New York, and the Preferred Accident Insurance Co., chairman of the board of directors of J. White Co. (Ltd.), London, president and director of the Knapp Extract Co., president and director of the Maltine Co., treasurer and director of the Worcester Salt Co., president and director of the Jamaica Estates, and director of the Garden City Estates. Died in 1913.

THOMAS LOWRY.

Thomas Lowry was a financier of Minneapolis, holding large corporate interests which extended in various directions. He at one time owned the entire street railway systems of St. Paul and Minneapolis, later merged as the Twin City Rapid Transit Co., of which he become president; was also president of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railroad, an underlying property of the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. Died in 1909.

SETH LOW.

Seth Low was a mayor of New York, 1902–3; trustee Carnegie Institution, Washington; president National Civic Federation; member American Philosophical Society, New York Academy of Sciences, New York Academy Political Science, and similar organizations.

JACOB W. MILLER.

Jacob W. Miller, another of the 19 Navy League founders, was at that time the general manager of the Marion district of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., on the board of directors of which sat J. P. Morgan. Mr. Miller is also president of the Costa Rica Development Co., of which Col. Thompson, president of the Navy League, is a director.

ROBERT S. SLOAN.

Robert S. Sloan is a trustee of the American Surety Co., 100 Broadway, New York, and has as one of his fellow trustees William Nelson Cromwell, who is also a director of Col. Thompson's International Nickel Co. R. A. C. Smith, another trustee of the American Surety Co., is a contributor to the Navy League. Mr. Sloan is also president and director of the Fitzgibbons Boiler Co., of Oswego, N. Y.

ANSON PHELPS STOKES.

Anson Phelps Stokes was a partner in the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co., merchants with large copper mining interests. This firm is now one of the largest copper mining concerns in the United States and is well represented on the Navy League. Mr. Stokes was afterwards a partner in the firm of Phelps, Dodge & Co., bankers; also trustee of the United States Trust Co., chairman of the board of directors of Woodbridge Co., chairman of the board of directors of Haynes Co., and a director of the Ansonia Clock Co. Died in 1913. Anson Phelps Stokes, son of this founder of the Navy League, who is secretary of Yale University, is vigorously opposing the propaganda of the Navy League.

NAVY LEAGUE HAS BEEN MENTIONED BEFORE.

During the Sixty-second Congress the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] charged on the floor of the House that the munition people of the country were behind the agitation for exorbitant naval extensions; he asserted that the officers of the Navy League were composed of persons who were directly or indirectly interested in the manufacture and sale of munitions of war; and in that connection, as the RECORD will show, he mentioned the fact that J. P. Morgan was at that time treasurer of the Navy League; that Herbert L. Satterlee, a brother-in-law of Mr. Morgan, was general counsel of the Navy League. He gave also the names of other directors of the Navy League who were connected with munitions plants.

WHY NOT PERMIT THE PUBLIC TO KNOW THE IDENTITY OF THE PATRIOTS BEHIND THE WAR TRUST?

When the naval bill was before the House last year I offered the following amendment:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall not consider any bid for the supplying of the armor or armament herein provided for unless such bid is accompanied by a sworn list of stockholders and bondholders of the corporation submitting such bid, such list of stockholders and bondholders to be taken from the books of said corporation as of date of July 1, 1914: And it is further provided, That such list of stockholders and bondholders shall be transmitted to Congress in a separate report by the Secretary of the Navy.

This amendment went to its grave on a point of order made by the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

My purpose in offering the amendment was to ascertain the names of the shareholders of the war trust, the names of the men who profit from the manufacture of war munitions by private construction. Those who are advocating the taking of profit out of war and preparation for war by having all Army and Navy equipment manufactured in Government plants can make a more intelligent fight if they know exactly who they are fighting. Until the identity of the stockholders of the war trust can be established it might, perhaps, even though unpleasant, be logical to assume that those patriots who cry out in anguish every time the Government manufacture of war munitions is mentioned have been struck in the region of the pocketbook, an exceedingly tender part of the anatomy.

Comparisons are odious, but in 1909 the Investors' Review of London examined the stockholders' lists of several British war-trafficking concerns and it found in the list of one company alone (Armstrong, Whitworth) the names of:

Sixty noblemen, their wives, sons, or daughters.
Fifteen baronets.
Twenty knights.
Eight members of Parliament.
Twenty military and navy officers.
Eight journalists.

Later lists revealed a marked connection between stock holding in armor and munition companies and active membership of "purely patriotic" organizations, such as the British Navy League.

GOVERNMENT MANUFACTURE OF POWDER IS ECONOMICAL.

Relative to the Du Pont powder concern, which has had representation on the Navy League in the person of T. C. du Pont, the Government has been paying this firm all the way from 53 to 80 cents a pound for smokeless powder. The Government will soon be manufacturing nearly all of its powder at a cost of approximately 25 cents a pound, overhead charges not included, according to Secretary of the Navy Daniels. Representative JAMES W. GOOD, of Iowa, is one of the Members of Congress who has taken a special interest in the prices paid the Du Ponts for powder, and as a member of the House Committee on Appropriations in 1912 brought out much valuable and interesting testimony. As a result of the information developed before a subcommittee, of which Mr. SHERLEY, of Kentucky, was chairman and of which Mr. GOOD and Mr. RAUCH, of Indiana, were members, legislation was enacted providing that the Government should not pay in excess of 53 cents a pound. This resulted in a saving of a considerable sum to the Government. In the meantime the cost of producing powder in Government factories has been gradually reduced. It is probable that the cost of manufacturing powder in Government plants is to-day not much in excess of 32 cents a pound, all overhead charges included.

I have stated elsewhere in these remarks that the navy leagues of the various nations have a fraternalism of their own, much as that which has existed between the armor makers. Relative to the manner in which the armor makers have cooperated, I will quote the following from my remarks published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 15, 1915:

ARMOR PLATE PATRIOTISM IS WORLD-WIDE.

There appears to be no real competition between the armor manufacturers of the various countries. Once, in 1893, the American armor ring made a noise like competition, when it sold armor to Russia for $249, while charging the United States $616, and for a time great consternation prevailed in the ranks of the war trusts of the various nations.

But during this period the armor manufacturers of the world met in Paris, and since then there has been little or no competition worthy of the name. The armor manufacturers asked themselves why they should cut each others' throats and why it would not be to their advantage to receive $500 or 600 a ton instead of $200 or $300.

In the naval hearings for 1914, page 621, the present Secretary of the Navy, Josephus Daniels, used the following language in referring to an advertisement for bids for armor plate for the dreadnaught Pennsylvania:

"When we came to the armor we rejected all the bids, and were then absolutely in a situation from which it appeared there was no relief. Though you can not establish it in black and white, there is no doubt of an Armor Plate Trust all over the world. That is to say, the people abroad who make armor plate will not come here and submit bids, because they know if they do our manufacturers will go abroad and submit bids. They have divided the world, like Gaul, into three parts."

For more definite evidence of the tremendous syndication and wide sympathies of armor-plate patriotism, an examination of the Harvey United Steel Co., of London, is instructive and entertaining.

The Harvey United Steel Co. (see British Stock Exchange Yearbook, 1912, p. 1211) "was registered July 16, 1901, to amalgamate or control four other companies holding the rights of the Harvey patents for treating steel, including the Harvey Steel Co. of Great Britain (Ltd.) and the Harvey Continental Steel Co. (Ltd.)."

They were also licensors for the Krupp and Charpy processes of hardening armor plate.

The Harvey Co. in a few months effected a world-wide organization for preparation for war which surpasses anything in the nature of an international alliance for peace that all of the peace societies of the world have been able to accomplish in a century of labor. Although paying handsome dividends, it is claimed that this company has been voluntarily wound up during the last year, after the decisions of two extraordinary general meetings held on July 15 and 31, 1912, but it is very difficult to feel sure that this international association of patriots for profit is really dead and that it has not been resurrected in some less discoverable form.

These are the firms which, banded together, were known as the Harvey Steel Co.:

GREAT BRITAIN.

Vickers (Ltd.) Albert Vickers, chairman of the great English war-trafficking firm that bears his name, not only held 2,697 shares in the Harvey Steel Co., but was its managing director, and was one of the two persons intrusted with its alleged winding up.

Wm. Beardmore & Co. (Ltd.). William Beardmore, chairman of this company, was a director of the Harvey Co.

W. G. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. (Ltd.). J. M. Falkner, a director of this firm, was also on the board of the Harvey Co.

John Brown & Co. (Ltd.), the Coventry Ordnance Co. (Ltd.), and Thos. Firth & Co. (Ltd.) were all represented by C. E. Ellis, with a holding of 7,438 shares.

The Fairfield Shipbuilding Co. (Ltd.), and Messrs. Cammell, Laird & Co. (Ltd.), are, of course, largely interested in the Coventry Ordnance Co. (Ltd.), and are both in alliance with John Brown & Co. (Ltd.), with the last of whom are connected also the Projectile Co. (Ltd.), Messrs. Palmer's Shipbuilding & Iron Co., and the Hadfield Foundry Co. (Ltd.).

UNITED STATES.

The Bethlehem Steel Co. (Ltd.) held 4,301 shares in the Harvey Co. With the Bethlehem Co. was at this time joined Harlan & Hollingsworth, of Wilmington; Union Iron Works, of San Francisco; and Samuel L. Moore & Son, at Elizabeth. Mr. Schwab, the power behind the Bethlehem corporation, had also a $10,000,000 subcontract for armor and gun mountings of two Argentine dreadnaughts building by the Fore River Shipbuilding Co., which he has acquired, and by the New York Shipbuilding Co.

FRANCE.

Schneider & Co. held 9,862 shares in the Harvey Co., while La Cie. des Forges et Acieries de la Marine et d'Homécourt held another 150. The Harvey Steel Co. had four French directors, two of whom held 2,000 shares each.

ITALY.

Societa degli Alti Forni Fondiere ed Acciaiene di Terni held 8,000 shares, and was represented by Raffaele Bettini. This firm is in alliance with Vickers (Ltd.) as Vickers-Terni, with a gigantic arsenal, and Vickers are also allied with Messrs. Odero and Messrs. Orlando.

Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. hold the shares of Armstrong-Pozzuoli (Ltd.), whose arsenal is "the chief supply of war material to the Italian Navy," and Ansaldo-Armstrong & Co. (Ltd.), of Genoa, is in the same group.

GERMANY.

Actien Gesellschaft der Dillingér Huttinwirke. In alliance with the patriot firms of England and France this company held no fewer than 2,731 shares, and was represented on the board by Fritz Saeftel, of Dillingen, Saad, Germany.

Friedrich Krupp, of the famous Krupp factories, held 4,731 shares, and was represented by Heinrish Vielhaber and Emil Ehrensberger.

Krupps are related to the Skoda Co., of Austria; Schneider & Co., who make the Creusot gun, have interests in Russia; while the Dillinger firm is owned by Deutsche Waffen & Munitions Fabrik, which has holdings in Belgium and in the Mauser Co., in addition to its huge munition factory in Germany.

METHODS OF THE WAR TRAFFICKERS IN KEEPING UP BUSINESS.

There are tricks in all trades. If the peoples of the several powers can be incited to mutual distrust, suspicion, and hatred, for instance, it means increased dividends for the stockholders of the war traffickers in each country.

The several leading powers aim to increase their naval strength in the same proportion. If one of the powers can be induced to take on an additional superdreadnaught, it is used as an argument as to why the other leading powers should do the same. It works as an endless chain, with the war burden ever and ever increasing on the backs of the taxpayers of the world.

If a new design can be worked out, that, too, means more grist for the shipbuilders. It calls for the speedy "scrapping" of the vessels already on hand as "obsolete." "Scrapping" means throwing on the scrap heap as old junk. So the life of the battleship is ever lessening.

Another trick in the trade of the war traders which is obviously profitable, otherwise it would not be continued, is the hiring of retired Army and Navy officials and ex-Members of Congress by the powder, armor, and shipbuilding concerns. These ex-officials know the inner workings of the military branches of the Government, know the personnel in an intimate way, and by private conversation, by correspondence, and in various ways are in a position to obtain much useful information. They know how to go about things for results. Through these ex-officials the War Trust has become thoroughly at home in Washington.

There seems to be no limit to the extremes to which the war traders are willing to go for business.

Although scarcely believeable, it is the proven fact that British and German war trusts many years ago actually set about to represent to their respective home Governments that their rivals were planning to build and building great armadas of giant fighting craft, which have since been proven absolutely to have been figments of the imagination pure and simple. The same character of campaigns has been going on between France and Germany, between the countries in the triple alliance and the triple entente, and it is yet to be established whether the United States of America has not also been the victim of a similar brand of commercialism, in which patriotism is the means and profit the end.

Misrepresentation as to the building programs of Great Britain and Germany were carried on to such an extent that the papers became full of it, and the suspicion of the people toward each other grew and grew. It was inevitable that there could be but one end to such proceedings, and that end war.

Specific information, replete with details, is available to show just how the work was carried on.

Briefly, this is the story: Beginning in 1906, Mr. H. H. Mulliner, managing director of the Coventry Ordnance Co., of England, one of the great British war-trafficking concerns, gave himself to the work of propagating the myth of a gigantic expansion of Krupp's works in particular and German military acceleration in general.

It was an underground campaign, but subsequent letters and speeches (Mulliner's communications to London Times, Aug. 2 and 16, Sept. 21, Dec. 14 and 17, 1909; Jan. 1, 3, 6, 7, 8, 12, 15, and 18, 1910, etc.) indicate that Mr. Mulliner's "information," sent first to the war office in May, 1906, was "passed on to the Admiralty," "was discussed by them with several outsiders" and then "passed from hand to hand so that hundreds have read it."

Of this "information" it need only be added that as soon as it became public it was contradicted by Messrs. Krupp, through Hon. John Leyland, member of Parliament, in England, and other correspondents. After some years it was practically admitted by the British Government to have been false. Time has proved that it never had any real basis.

But the "information" had its effect, the effect that Managing Director Mulliner, of the Coventry Ordnance Co., desired that it should have. The "information," becoming public, swept Great Britain off its feet. The people took up and repeated the war traders' slogan: "We want eight, and we won't wait," meaning battleships.

Ten days after Mr. Mulliner presented his "information" to the supreme governing body of the British Empire the statement explanatory of the navy estimates was made. It showed a total of $176,793,522 for 1909–10, an increase of $13,720,752; new construction accounting for an increase of $6,512,400.

As a result of the "tip" furnished by the managing director of the war-munition firm the British Government foretold that Germany would have 17 dreadnaught battleships by March, 1912, and Leader Balfour, still more impressed by the fake "scare," declared Germany would have 25, or, in any case, 21 dreadnaughts in March, 1912.

On almost the same day the predicting was going on in England the German admiral, Von Tirpitz, told the budget committee of the German Reichstag that the German Navy would have only 13 dreadnaughts in the autumn of 1912.

Germany had, in fact, according to the British Naval Annual, only 9 dreadnaught battleships and cruisers on March 31, 1912, and only 14 on March 31, 1913.

GERMANY AND FRANCE EXPLOITED BY ARMAMENT FIRMS.

Germany, too, has had its scandal on account of the war-trust octopus. In his speech in the Reichstag on April 18, 1913, Herr Liebknecht made exposures and revelations which created a profound sensation throughout the world. I will call attention briefly to the remarkable conditions of affairs revealed by him:

The German Arms and Ammunition Factory, one of the greatest ordnance establishments in the world, employing an agent—Brandt by name—whose special duty it was to corrupt and keep in his pay officials of the military departments of the German Government.

Government documents of the most confidential nature finding their way by mysterious channels into the safes of Herr von Dewitz, one of the managers of Krupp Works.

A great illustrated journal of Leipzig preparing, with the open cooperation of the Government and the armament firms, a special number designed to smooth the passage of the military and naval appropriations.

Herr von Gontard, director of the German Arms and Ammunition Factory, inspiring in the Pan-German organ, Die Post, the most violent diatribes against France; giving orders to have a French newspaper publish articles representing that the French war department was increasing its number of machine guns, when it was doing nothing of the kind, first exciting French opinion by provocative matter in the German press and then instigating a German demand for armaments by means of bellicose utterances in the French press.

Here is a letter published in Vorwarts, a German newspaper, which affords an inside glance of the business methods of a war-trafficking firm:

PERSONAL DOCUMENTS.

(Sheet 15.)

Mr. ——— ———, Paris:

(G. No. 8236. Geheim-registratur, i. e., number in register of secret documents.)

We have just wired you: "Please await in Paris our letter sent today."

The reason for this message was that we should be glad for you to get an article into one of the most widely-read French newspapers—the Figaro, if possible—to the following effect:

"The French ministry of war has decided to accelerate considerably the provision of new-pattern machine guns and to order double the quantity at first intended."

Please do your utmost to secure the acceptance of an article on these lines.

Yours, faithfully, VON GONTARD, Posegarten,
(For the German Arms and Ammunition Factory).

To explain this missive—if, indeed, any explanation is necessary—it may be suggested that the Waffenfabrik, a German ammunition firm, desiring to obtain an order for machine guns, which the Reichstag did not seem disposed to agree to, sought to obtain the insertion of a news item in the Figaro, one of the great dailies of Paris, to the effect that France was doubling the quantity of its machine guns. It can readily be conceived how such a clipping from a leading Paris newspaper would be an effective exhibit to accompany a request to the Reichstag for an order for more machine guns for Germany. Such is armor-plate patriotism.

JAPAN HAS RECENTLY HAD BIG NAVAL SCANDALS.

The war trust does not confine its operations to the Christian nations, but gathers the pagan governments into its net as well. The arm of the war trust is long. It has reached across the Pacific and laid hold of Japan. In the last year and a half Japan has had army and naval scandals that have shaken it to the core. There have been arrests, courts-martial, convictions, imprisonments, and attempted suicides of high military officers, all due to the fact that profit has not been taken out of war and preparation for war.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, does anyone on the other side desire to speak now in reply to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman from North Carolina to bring up the joint resolution concerning the extension of the war-revenue tax to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Does anyone on the gentleman's side desire to make any remarks now in reply to the gentleman from Illinois? If so, I shall withhold my motion to adjourn.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this same subject of preparedness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the same subject about which the gentleman from Illinois has spoken. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to know if it would be construed as revising remarks if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] should undertake to correct any little defect in grammar or the form of expression?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly not.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. HARDY. I thought that was not intended.

The SPEAKER. It is the intention of the rule that a Member shall not make one speech here and publish another, either in whole or in part.

Mr. MANN. Until the last Congress, or the Congress before that, I do not think the request was ever made to revise and extend the remarks. It was always to extend the remarks. Ordinary revision has always been made by everyone in the House except myself.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of a bill for pensioning veterans of the Indian wars.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of pensioning veterans of the Indian wars. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a speech delivered by D. W. Norris, jr., on the subject of good roads, at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, in October, 1915.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing a speech made by D. W. Norris, jr., on the subject of good roads. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object to this first request, but if it becomes very soon the practice of Members of the House to make requests for extension of remarks by inserting speeches made by gentlemen from their districts throughout the country I shall then object to padding the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, December 16, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication of the Secretary of State, submitting amendments to the estimate of appropriations for the Department of State proper and for foreign intercourse, as printed in the Annual Book of Estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 398); to the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 32); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting report of expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, under the appropriations, "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture, 1915," and "Miscellaneous expenses, Department of Agriculture, 1915–16" (H. Doc. No. 399); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MOON, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 562) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 7), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CANTRILL, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 3) to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 9), which said House joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HERNANDEZ: A bill (H. R. 5755) to authorize the payment of $2,000 to the widow of the late Tranquilino Luna in full for his contest expenses in the contested-eletcion case of Manzanares against Luna; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. TAGUE: A bill (H. R. 5756) to extend the provisions of the bond and warehouse statement to merchandise free of duty; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1915.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that Thou hast so related us in the marvelous oneness of human interests that if we are true to ourselves we can not be false to any man. Our interest lies far beyond our thought of self to-day. Great world issues press themselves upon us. Vast tracts lie in feverish excitement and in mortal agony. Yet we turn our thoughts in prayer to Thee in the assurance that if we are right with Thy law we will be able to find the way of the general good. Teach us the divine wisdom of attesting all issues in the holiest place of our own hearts where truth in fullness lies. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday last was read and approved.

REPORT OF PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 32).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service for the fiscal year 1915, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial received by myself and my colleagues of Oregon from the American Neutrality League of that State, to which are attached about 6,000 names of our citizens, protesting against the shipment of arms and munitions to any of the belligerents. I shall not ask that the names be printed, but I do ask that the body of the memorial itself be printed in the RECORD. I take pleasure in doing this at the request of the signers, all of whom are citizens of Oregon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The memorial is as follows:

To GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN, United States Senator; HARRY LANE, United States Senator; W. C. HAWLEY, Congressman; N. J. SINNOTT, Congressman; and C. N. MCARTHUR, Congressman:

We, the undersigned citizens and voters of Oregon, are absolutely opposed to the exportation of arms and ammunition to any and all nations at war, and, for humanitarian reasons, we request you to vote for and support at the next session of Congress a resolution investing the President with the power to place an embargo upon the shipment of all arms and ammunition.

We maintain that the shipment of arms and ammunition is wrong and that we, as a sovereign Nation, have a right to prohibit, at any time, the exportation of arms and ammunition. We base our claims on international law and precedent, as follows:

Woolsey on International Law: "If the neutral, instead of wheat should send powder or balls, cannon or rifles, this would be a direct encouragement of the war, and so a departure from the neutral position.

"On January 23, 1871, long after the Franco-Prussian War had begun, President Grant signed an embargo on arms. The result of this was that the war was settled within a few months and the shedding of much blood was prevented.

"President Taft in 1912 issued a proclamation forbidding the export of arms and munitions to Mexico, and in 1913, while war was in progress, President Wilson placed an embargo on munitions of war to Mexico.

"The British Government has a law on its statute books conferring discretionary power on the King of England to forbid the export of arms and ammunition. On April 23, 1898, at the time of the Spanish-American War, that Government warned British subjects against unneutral acts, among which were enumerated the supplying of arms, ammunition, military stores, or materials.

"During the Spanish-American War, upon the mere protest of our ambassador, Andrew D. White, the German Government stopped the sale of arms and munitions of war to Spain."

At this time every neutral country, except the United States, has placed an embargo on munitions of war.

In addition to the above, we have the following declarations of President Wilson:

"We must be neutral in fact as well as in name, and we must put a curb on every transaction which might give preference to one party in the struggle over another.

"We should not extend or withhold aid to or from either if actual circumstances were such that both parties are not equally befriended."

Aside from the above, we are convinced that the building up of the enormous industry in arms and ammunition is a serious and positive menace to our safety and economic welfare.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have a letter, in the form of a petition, which I desire to present, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

ELIZABETH BOARD OF TRADE,
Elizabeth, N. J., December 14, 1915.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
The Burlington, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the meeting of the Elizabeth Board of Trade on Thursday evening, December 9, the following resolutions, passed by the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at its convention at Savannah, were approved:

"Resolved, That we request of Congress the immediate acquisition, by purchase or condemnation, of the existing Chesapeake and Delaware Canal and the improvement thereof to a free sea-level waterway, as recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

"Resolved, That we request of Congress the immediate adoption of the project for a modern waterway across the State of New Jersey, connecting the Delaware River with Raritan Bay, and the enactment of such provisions as will insure the early acquisition of the right of way from the State, as recommended by the Chief of Engineers and pledged by the State statute."

This organization has always been interested in the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association's project, and your support of measures which will make the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal and the canal across New Jersey links in this intracoastal system will be appreciated.

Yours, truly,

ALEXIS J. COLMAN,
Secretary.

Mr. PITTMAN. I present a petition prepared by the Nevada Indian Association, signed by 5,000 citizens, relative to home sites for the nonreservation Indians in the State of Nevada. I do not ask that the names be printed; but, as the petition is very short, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

THE NEVADA INDIAN ASSOCIATION,
July 1, 1915.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS and Hon. KEY PITTMAN, United States Senators from Nevada, and Hon. E. E. ROBERTS, United States Representative from Nevada:

We, the undersigned citizens and residents of the State of Nevada, respectfully represent and petition as follows:

There are about 5,000 Indians now residing within the State of Nevada. Of this number approximately 2,000 are living upon reservations which are maintained by and under the direct supervision of the Government of the United States, while the remaining 3,000 are homeless, without support, and have never received any gratuities from the Government, living in hovels, under insanitary conditions which menace not only their health but the health of the communities in which they live, and leading a precarious existence. Many of these 3,000 Indians are squatting upon land from which they are liable at any time to be ejected; no encouragement is now given them to support themselves or to improve their present distressing condition. There are no available public lands for their use, and the present Indian reservations are inadequate for a larger number than those who are already being provided for. We believe that many of these homeless Indians, with proper instruction in home making and agriculture and with some financial assistance from the Government, will make useful residents.

And we respectfully petition your active support of an appropriation by Congress of the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of procuring home sites with adequate water rights and providing agricultural instruction for the nonreservation Indians of the State of Nevada, to the end that they may become self-supporting and more useful residents of this State.

Mr. THOMPSON presented memorials of the Society of Friends, of Northbranch; the Society of Friends, of Hesper; the Society of Friends, of La Fayette; the Society of Friends, of Haviland; the Society of Friends, of Rose Hill; the Society of Friends, of Rose Valley; Local Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, of Blaine; Local Union No. 562, Farmers' Union, of Erie; Local Union No. 823, Farmers' Union, of Stark; Hurricane Grange, No. 359, Patrons of Husbandry, of Overbrook; sundry citizens of Liberal and North Branch; and of the congregation of the Church of the Brethren, of Larned, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Army and Navy Medal of Honor Legion of the United States of America, of Washington, D. C., pledging aid to the President and Congress to maintain the honor of our country and the rights of her citizens, which was referred to the Cimmittee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MYERS. I present a letter from Hon. S. V. Stewart, governor of Montana, regarding the Flathead reclamation project, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Helena, Mont., December 1, 1915.

Hon. HENRY L. MYERS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Herewith I am sending a letter that has just been received from Mr. James Harbert, chairman of the irrigation committee of the Polson Chamber of Commerce, in which he asks my assistance in the campaign for a million dollar appropriation for the Flathead irrigation project.

I am glad, indeed, to add my voice to the cause, and would rejoice to know that the energetic efforts of yourself and the other members of the Montana delegation had borne fruit in the shape of an adequate appropriation for this exceedingly important work. It seems to me that the parent Government in control of these projects owes it to itself and to the settlers upon the projects to exert every effort possible to bring its plans to a workable conclusion.

In view of your intimate knowledge of the details of this stupendous project, it is not necessary for me to particularize. It is apparent, however, that since the project is only 25 per cent completed after a lapse of five years, the duty of the Federal Government is plain in the premises. If the Government means to keep faith with the settlers who have gone and those who would go upon this great domain, it should give an earnest of its purpose. This can not be done by a niggardly appropriation. The setting apart of a liberal sum for the prosecution of the work would inspire all those interested with fresh hope and give notice to all our people that the Government was in all earnest when the project was undertaken and that it proposes to do its full share to bring about a realization of the hopes of the people in that splendid section of Montana.

I sincerely trust that the Government may be brought to see and discharge its duty with regard to the Flathead project.

Very truly, yours,

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

Mr. MYERS presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 10. (Introduced by MacDonald, of Flathead.)

Whereas the Glacier National Park, situated in the counties of Flathead and Teton, in the State of Montana, is wholly under the supervision of the Government of the United States, is divided by a high mountain range over which there is no means of travel other than by railroad; and

Whereas the various counties in the State of Montana both east and west of the Glacier National Park have constructed and do maintain wholly at their expense highways which are now open for through travel from the east boundary of the State to the said Glacier National Park and from the west boundary of the State to the west entrance of said park, which said highways connect with highways which are now open for travel from the Great Lakes to the Pacific coast, leaving an unconstructed link through the Glacier National Park which should be completed at the earliest possible moment; and

Whereas under present conditions it is impossible for tourists and travelers to go through said park except by pack horses and under very adverse conditions: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That the Government of the United States be urged to make an appropriation and to start the construction of a roadway through the park from east to west; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives from Montana.

GEORGE L. RAMSEY,
Speaker of the House.
W. W. MCDOWELL,
President of the Senate.

Approved March 8, 1915.

S. V. STEWART, Governor.

A. M. ALDERSON,
Secretary of State.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Montana, ss:

I, A. M. Alderson, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of House joint memorial No. 10, praying the Federal Government to construct a roadway from east to west through Glacier National Park, enacted by the fourteenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by S. V. Stewart, governor of said State, on the 8th day of March, 1915.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 1st day of April, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.]

A. M. ALDERSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. MYERS presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 8. (By Burnett.)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana, in legislative session assembled, do most respectfully represent and petition—

Whereas, in order to secure the exploration and development of coal, oil, and gas resources, it is necessary that leases be executed by the State of Montana, granting authority to its lessees to explore such coal, oil, and gas resources and to extract the same from its lands, and to use so much of the surface as may be necessary therefor, upon the payment of a proper rental or royalty; and

Whereas, by the terms of the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, providing for the formation of constitutions and State governments for the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington, and the admission thereof into the Union, and making donations of public lands to such States, it was provided that the lands so donated and granted may be leased for periods of not more than five years, in quantities not exceeding one section, to any one person or company: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana do request the Congress of the United States to so amend the aforesaid act of February 22, 1889, as to permit the said several States, including the State of Montana, by its proper officers, to execute leases for the exploration and extraction of the aforesaid minerals which may be contained upon or beneath the surface of any of said granted lands, together with the right to use so much of the surface of said lands as may be necessary therefor, and for such periods of time as may be determined by or under the legislative authority of said States.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forthwith transmitted to the presiding officer of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the Senate and House Committees on Public Lands, the Secretary of the Interior, and to each Member of the Montana delegation in Congress.

Mr. MYERS presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 7. (Introduced by Coburn.)

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, situated in the northwestern portion of the State of Montana, comprising an area of approximately 1,500,000 acres, the major portion of which is of great agricultural value and capable of producing cereals and other farm products in great abundance, is now reserved for the use of the Piegan Indian Tribe; and

Whereas the total membership of said Indian tribe is less than 2,489 persons, including men, women, and children; and

Whereas there has been allotted in severalty to each member of said tribe valuable lands, sufficient under a proper administration of their affairs to sustain said Indians in comfort and assure them the means of an independent livelihood; and

Whereas but a very small portion of said Indian reservation is ever used by any of said Indian tribe for any purpose whatsoever, the same being leased to large cattle owners and flock masters at a rental insignificant by comparison with the agricultural possibilities thereof; and

Whereas practically all of the valuable homestead lands of northwestern Montana have been claimed and occupied under the homestead laws of the United States; and

Whereas it is physically impossible for this number of Indians to occupy and use this vast area of valuable farm land, even though said Indians were possessed of the average ability of our white citizens in the management of agricultural pursuits; and

Whereas it would result in the great betterment of the industrial, financial, and moral conditions of the Indians themselves if they were compelled to occupy, use, and manage, under proper supervision, the lands already allotted to them, large areas of which have been irrigated by the Government at great expense and are now almost wholly unused: Therefore be it

Resolved (the senate concurring), That we, the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, do hereby petition the Congress of the United States for the passage of necessary legislation to open for settlement at as early a date as practicable the land embraced within the Blackfeet Indian Reservation situated in the northwestern portion of the State of Montana.

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded to the Secretary of State, to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about the early opening to homestead settlement or otherwise of said Blackfeet Indian Reservation.

Mr. MYERS presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution 5. (Introduced by Gladden.)

A resolution memorializing Congress for the building of one steel bridge jointly with Sanders County across the Flathead River on the Flathead Indian Reservation.

Whereas the lands lying west of the Flathead River in the Flathead Indian Reservation in Sanders County are populated by about one-third of the white and Indian residents of the county;

Whereas the agency buildings and one of the chief marketing and commercial centers of said district, the town of Dixon, are situated on the east side of said Flathead River;

Whereas there are no means of communication from the Government lands of the Flathead Indian Reservation, lying west of the Flathead River, and the agency located at the town of Dixon, except by a long, devious route, necessitating the travel of 100 miles or more;

Whereas the lands embraced within said district have been thrown open to settlement under the land laws of the United States;

Whereas there is no bridge across said Flathead River, and the same is not fordable, at the said town of Dixon, and ferry boats can not operate thereon except during a limited period of time in the summer months: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring herein), That we petition the Congress of the United States for the necessary funds to be taken out of the moneys belonging to the Flathead Indians to enable the joint construction with the County of Sanders, Mont., under the supervision of the Board of County Commissioners of Sanders County, of one steel highway bridge across the Flathead River, opposite the agency buildings, at Dixon, Mont., one-half of the expense of the construction of said bridge to be paid out of the funds belonging to the Flathead Indians and the other half of said expense to be paid out of the road and bridge fund of Sanders County, under an agreement to be entered into between the proper Federal officers and the county commissioners of Sanders County.

Resolved, That a copy hereof be transmitted to the secretary of state of the State of Montana, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about speedy action for the accomplishment of the ends and purposes herein indicated.

Mr. MYERS presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 10. (Introduced by Byrnes.)

Whereas soon after the commencement of the war which is now being waged in Europe certain of the belligerent nations began and continued the seizure of ships sailing under American and other neutral flags carrying copper from America to European nations not involved in the war, which seizures resulted in almost the entire cessation of copper shipments to neutral countries, and such narrowing of the legitimate foreign markets with the restricted demand in this country threatened to make impossible the continuance of the copper production in this country, even at the then curtailed rate, thus most seriously crippling one of the main industries of Montana and bringing further disaster to our people; and

Whereas largely through the prompt, energetic, and able protests of Montana's Senators and Representatives in Congress, the Hon. HENRY L. MYERS, the Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH, the Hon. TOM STOUT, and the Hon. JOHN M. EVANS, and their clear exposition of the injustice and indefensibility of such action of the warring nations in interfering with commerce under neutral flags and between neutral nations, the State Department of the United States made emphatic protests against such conduct and notified the offending nation that such interference with our commerce would no longer be tolerated, which protest has resulted in at least partial, and promises in the near future full, relief from such situation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana does hereby emphatically commend the action of and the assitance rendered by Montana Senators and Representatives and does hereby express the indebtedness of the people of our State to them, and does hereby commend the Department of State of the United States for the firm stand taken by it upon a matter so vital to Montana's interest, and does further urge that continued vigilance be exercised, to the end that there be no further interference of this character with commerce in the products of Montana's industries: Be it further

Mr. MYERS. I present petitions from the Chamber of Commerce of Kalispell, the public schools of Polson, of sundry homesteaders residing in the Little Bitter Root Valley, and of sundry citizens, all in the State of Montana, and also a petition from the Chamber of Commerce of Spokane, Wash., praying for an increased appropriation for the Flathead Indian reclamation project. I ask that the petitions may be printed in the RECORD, with the name of the first signer and the words "and many others," if there be more than one signer.

There being no objection, the petitions were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KALISPELL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Kalispell, Mont., November 12, 1915.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

The Flathead reclamation project, embraced in the counties of Flathead and Missoula, is one of the largest and most valuable reclamation projects in the United States, embracing approximately 152,000 acres of land, involving the ownership of Indian allotments and lands belonging to white settlers, taken under the homestead act. The estimated cost of this project is $6,500,000.

More than five years have passed since work first commenced upon this project, less than $2,000,000 having been actually expended up to date, there being only about 25 per cent of the project completed at the present time, and it has been estimated that it will require at least 25 years, at the present rate of progress, to complete this project.

A great many people who are holding homesteads upon this land have already been in this country for more than 25 years and have spent the best part of their lives in opening up and developing a new region, formerly turning their attention to stock raising.

This land was taken in good faith by the settlers, believing that the Government would carry out its expressed and implied pledge in placing water upon their land.

The record up to date shows that the Government has been negligent and manifestly unfair in the tardiness of its proceedings and dealings with the people.

It is estimated that 50 per cent of the people have become discouraged and have lost faith in the General Government and are leaving their claims after having spent all the money they had in partial development of same.

It occurs to us that there is an obligation on the part of the Government toward the people who have come hundreds of miles and located on this land, spending all their earnings for years and years upon the foundation of a home, and it is up to the Government of the United States to make good their implied and sacred promise to the people.

There is probably nowhere in the United States a region possessing a more beautiful climate or of more scenic attractiveness, or a soil that will respond with greater returns to irrigation than this Flathead project.

In view of the foregoing we respectfully urge that immediate action be taken looking toward the development of this Flathead irrigation project by the present session of Congress.

MAURICE D. PACE
(And many others).

LONE PINE, MONT., October 1, 1915.

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We, the undersigned, whose names are hereunto subscribed, respectfully represent that we are homesteaders in the Little Bitter Root Valley, under the Flathead irrigation project, on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana. The Little Bitter Root Valley, in which we live, along with other parts of the Flathead Reservation, was thrown open to settlement five years ago, and people were invited by the Government to come in here and settle and purchase land from the Government at the appraised valuation of from $1 to $7 per acre. It is not a free gift of Government land. We pay for all the land we get, at the appraised valuation thereof.

The Government intended this for an irrigated settlement. The land is dry land, unfit for dry-land farming. It must be irrigated in order to produce crops. The Government divided the land into homestead units of 40 and 80 acres, intended for irrigated lands; entirely too small for dry-land farming, even if the land were adapted thereto. The Government gave the people to understand that their lands would be irrigated, and the settlers agreed to pay back to the Government the cost of putting water on their lands. The Government authorized and started the Flathead reclamation project. The settlers were justified in assuming that work thereon would be prosecuted with due diligence and that it would be completed in a reasonable time.

Settlers came into the Little Bitter Root Valley five years ago and erected improvements and began cultivation of their lands, putting their all therein and staking everything they had thereon, supposing they would get water within a reasonable time.

Five years have passed and nothing has been done; no start has been made toward putting water on the lands of the Little Bitter Root Valley. For four years the settlers struggled and starved, those who could remain. Two-thirds or three-fourths of them have been compelled to abandon the struggle and leave their homes. Most of those who have remained have expended all of their means. This year unusual rains have produced good crops and has shown of what the land is capable with water on it. There has not been another such year in 25 years, and there may not be one again in 25 years more.

The settlers are in a desperate situation. They feel they have not been treated right. They feel the Government has not kept good faith with them. We appeal most earnestly to you for an adequate appropriation by Congress for the Flathead reclamation project for next year, sufficient to use a part thereof for starting reclamation work in the Little Bitter Root Valley, which is a legitimate part of the Flathead reclamation project, and should no longer be overlooked. We earnestly pray to you to heed our prayer for relief. We are American citizens and bear our share in keeping up the Government, and we ask for justice at your hands. With great respect,

GEO. G. O'NEAL
(And many others).

To the President and Congress of the United States, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: As one of the unit holders, occupying land within the Flathead project, I desire to submit for your consideration the following:

At the invitation of the Government I entered upon an irrigable unit embraced in the Flathead project, under promise by the Government that my land would be irrigated either in whole or in part, and after more than five years of watchful and patient waiting this project is now about 25 per cent completed, and as a result of the Government's failure to carry out its express and implied pledges made to us at the time we made entry, many of the unit holders have been compelled to temporarily or permauently abandon their homes.

We maintain that the treatment accorded to us has been unfair and not in harmony with the promises made us when we settled upon these arid lands, and we can see no good reason for the Government's procrastinating methods in dealing with this project up to this time. It is to the interest of both the Indian and white man that this project be prosecuted more vigorously, and the lands will amply stand for all construction and maintenance charges, provided the work is carried on in an economical and businesslike manner.

All funds expended in connection with the project are reimbursable either to the Indian or the Government, and the sooner this reclamation scheme is completed the sooner the Indian will be reimbursed for the money he has invested on account of same.

In view of the foregoing facts I respectfully request that Congress grant an appropriation for at least a million dollars for construction work on this project during the ensuing year.

Respectfully submitted.

NIELS A. CHRISTENSEN
(And many others).

To the President and Congress of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: This joint communication from the Chambers of Commerce of Kalispell, Whitefish, and Columbia Falls, Mont., is directed to you for the purpose of securing remedial legislation for the Indian allottees and farm-unit holders occupying lands under the Flathead reclamation project, situate in Flathead and Missoula Counties, in Montana.

This project embraces the reclamation of 152,000 acres of the finest lands of the former Flathead Indian Reserve, the ownership of which is about equally divided between the Indian and white man, and is the largest and most comprehensive Indian irrigation scheme ever undertaken in the United States.

The estimated cost of the project is $6,500,000, but after five years has elapsed since construction work was begun, less than 25 per cent of the project is completed, and the sole reason for this delay is that Congress appropriated less than $2,000,000 for the work during the period. It is evident that at this rate of appropriation it will require 25 years to finish the undertaking.

The Indian and white man alike entered these lands under the implied promise and pledge from the Government to have water available for these lands within a reasonable time. It has woefully failed to keep its obligation, and so flagrant a violation of agreement by an individual rather than the Government would doubtless be open to speedy redress in the courts.

There is not the slightest element of charity entering into an appropriation by Congress for the Flathead project; all of the funds used in construction are reimbursable either to the Government or to the Indian fund, depending from which source received, and this obligation for repayment stands as a first lien upon all the lands within the project.

The towns of Kalispell, Whitefish, and Columbia Falls, Mont., are directly contiguous to the territory included in this project, and our merchants and manufacturers serve the settlers upon these lands. Our interest in urging the speedy completion of the project is as great as theirs, which completion means everything to the development of this fertile section of the Northwest, and consequently to the prosperity of its people.

We therefore request that an appropriation sufficiently large, looking toward the speedy completion of the Flathead irrigation project, be passed at the coming session of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

SPOKANE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Spokane, November 23, 1915.

To the President and Congress of the United States.

GENTLEMEN: This communication is addressed to you for the purpose of securing remedial legislation for the allottees and unit holders occupying lands within the Flathead project, situate in Flathead and Missoula Counties, in Montana.

If we are correctly informed, this project is the largest and most comprehensive Indian irrigation scheme ever undertaken in this country and involves the reclamation of approximately 152,000 acres of land, the ownership of same being about equally divided between the Indian and the white man.

We are advised that the completed cost of this project will be about $6,500,000, and after more than five years of construction work less than $2,000,000 has been actually expended. The project is now about 25 per cent completed and at the present rate appropriations are being made will require 25 years to complete this project.

The Indian and white man alike went upon these lands in good faith expecting the Government to carry out its express and implied pledges and promises made to them at the time they made entry. We maintain that the treatment accorded to the settlers under this project has been manifestly unfair, and inasmuch as the irrigation scheme has been properly authorized by law it is clearly the duty of the Government to push this work to a speedy completion and make the water available at the very earliest possible moment.

All the funds used in connection with the construction of this project are reimbursable either to the Indian or to the Government. The settlers have pledged their lands and very lives for all construction and maintenance charges, and we would like you to especially bear in mind the fact that no gratuitous appropriations have been made in connection with the Flathead project. The lands will amply stand for the expenditure providing the work is carried forth in a businesslike, expeditious, and economical manner.

The people of Spokane are particularly interested in the speedy completion of this project, as this district is within a 250-mile radius of the city and is a part of the great inland empire of which Spokane is the logical and geographical center. Our jobbers and manufacturers are serving the merchants on this project, and there is therefore a large community of interest between us and our relations are reciprocal to the last degree.

In view of the foregoing we respectfully request that an appropriation sufficiently large, looking toward the speedy development of the Flathead irrigation project, be passed by the next session of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Fort Peck, Mont., praying for the opening of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions.

Whereas the opening and settlement of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation has been a pronounced failure, we, citizens of the United States and members of the Fort Peck Settlement Association, in meeting assembled for the purpose of inducing the honorable Secretary of the Interior of the United States and the Congress of the United States to so alter the laws and regulations as to the settlement of the reservation that the same may be quickly settled and cultivated into fertile fields; and

Whereas the Government's attempt to settle this reservation has been a failure in that only approximately 500 entrymen have filed thereon, out of a possible 6,000, on the very fertile land of this reservation; and

Whereas the increased size of the unit of land has been no stimulus to the number of settlers on the reservation; and

Whereas the hardships in the settling of this reservation imposed by the present laws has caused settlers to seek other lands in the United States public domain and in the fertile lands of the Dominion of Canada; and

Whereas the present settlers upon the Fort Peck Reservation find the burden of meeting their payments under the present appraisement so great that many of them are unable to meet their payments thereon and to support their families, let alone improve their lands; and

Whereas the present method of appraisement has been a loss to the Indians, in that the lands have not been settled and the settlers now thereon have from necessity become delinquent in their payments, all tending toward the loss of anticipated funds to the Indians: And therefore be it

Resolved and respectfully suggested to the honorable Secretary of the Interior and the Congress of the United States, as follows, to wit:

1. That the appraisement as made of the land of the Fort Peck Reservation be removed and a reappraisement be made in lieu thereof.

2. That the payment of the appraised price of the land be extended over a period of 10 years.

3. That all settlers who have filed on 160-acre tracts be allowed to take additional 160-acre tracts on the reservation, although the same be not contiguous as now required by the homestead laws.

Respectfully submitted.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Olympia, Wash., praying for the establishment of summer homesteads in national forests. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution favoring a Federal law providing for summer homesteads in national forests.

Whereas the vast area of public land, national forests, State school lands, and Indian lands in the Northwest States, in many counties amounting to 50 and as high as 75 per cent of their area, that are not subject to taxation for the maintenance of local government and general local development; and

Whereas the national forests of the Northwest States of Montana, Idaho, and Washington cover an area of approximately 44,000,000 acres, covering one of the most remarkable scenic and climatic regions in the world; and

Whereas this vast scenic region has been made accessible to the tourist through the completion of the National Parks Transcontinental Highway, reaching from the Great Lakes to Puget Sound, and passing through the great national forests over one continuous natural park highway of more than a thousand miles; and

Whereas hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent by local communities in building lateral highways to beautiful local scenic attractions, lakes, canyons, and glaciers, making accessible a vast panorama of scenic wonderland; and

Whereas it has been estimated that in 1910 $350,000,000 of money was spent by American tourists in foreign lands, and in 1914 it is estimated that $500,000,000 was thus spent by our people; and

Whereas a recent Washington, D. C., dispatch, emanating from the Interior Department, says, "Reports made public to-night show that more than twice as many persons visited the national parks of the west in the season just closed than last year. Yellowstone Park recorded 51,820 tourists, compared with 20,250 in 1914. Mr. Lane said that the policy first inaugurated two years ago by permitting automobiles to enter the parks had been a success, and would be continued"; and

Whereas hundreds of tourists from Eastern and Southern States in automobiles made their first trip over the National Parks Transcontinental Highway in 1915, and declared it superior to the Lincoln Highway; and

Whereas at a Government sale of villa sites on Flathead Lake, Mont., August, 1915, every lot offered at public auction, comprising over 900, was sold to purchasers from different States of the Union, who purchased them for summer homes, proving conclusively that the people want summer homes in the Northwest; and

Whereas there are thousands of beautiful lakes, accessible by modern automobile roads, canyons, and deep forests along beautiful mountain streams, in the great national forests, offering beautiful summer homes to thousands of people of the arid and humid States of the East and South; and

Whereas there is an insistent and growing demand for summer homes in the great park regions of the Northwest, and to own them in fee simple: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor the enactment of a Federal law providing for summer homesteads in the national forests of 10 acres each, residence of three months during three successive years, with such improvements as the General Government might deem advisable, and at end of three years patent shall issue to the entryman.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

General belief among leading southern farmers and business men that bear cliques operating illegal combination purpose of depressing cotton prices. Bulls prosecuted heretofore by Government for boosting prices. Let Government take vigorous and effective action against bears. We have shortest crop in 16 years; largest consumption. Your prompt action will assist.

HENRY N. POPE.
President Farmers' Union of Texas and Association of State Presidents Farmers' Unions.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that I have called the attention of the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General to this matter, and both authorities have promised to give it immediate and vigorous investigation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have a telegram bearing upon the so-called deficiency tax bill. I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., December 1½, 1915.

Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

We want to protest as earnestly as we can against the reenactment of the emergency tax on toilet goods. We do not object to the users of face powder and lip rouge paying the Government for their vanity, but the emergency tax placed a theoretical penalty upon cleanliness, because $10 are spent for tooth and mouth cleaning substances, dandruff remedies, baby powders, etc., to $1 that is spent for actual vanity. The reason that cleanly people escaped this penalty is because retailers would not pass the tax along to consumers. The result is that the consumer escapes the 2½ per cent tax and the manufacturer, who passes it, contributes a 5 to 20 per cent tax on his business. If luxuries are to be taxed, jewelry, silks, satins, laces, feminine headwear in excess of $10 each, etc., could be named, but this would cause such a storm of protest that the proposers of the tax would abandon it, just as the gasoline auto tax was abandoned. Foreign manufacturers of toilet goods have been long established and are fostered and encouraged by their home governments. The American toilet-goods industry has had a hard row to hoe. It bears an excessive portion of the internal revenue. It may be almost put out of business because of the war, and now it would seem, on account of its weakness, it is to be again Belgianized with as hastily planned, expensively executed, and unjust a tax as has ever been imposed in this country. Please look into this carefully and oppose it if you think we are right.

THE HERPICIDE CO.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota, and the whole of such resolution.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the capitol, in the city of Bismarck, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution. (Lathrop Committee.)

Whereas by chapter 6 of the laws of the State of North Dakota, of 1891, entitled "An act designating and appropriating section 36 in township 140 north, range 49 west, in the county of Cass, for the use of the State agricultural college as a site for that institution," there was appropriated, with the consent of the Congress of the United States, out of the lands granted to the State of North Dakota by the United States for the use of the common schools, section 36, in township 140 north, range 49 west, in Cass County, N. Dak., for the use of the said agricultural college as a site for that institution; and

Whereas the common-school fund has been thereby decreased; and

Whereas it is for the best interest of such common schools in the State that such section of land so appropriated be replaced and a new section granted in lieu thereof; and

Whereas Federal legislation is necessary for that purpose: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, respectfully petitioned and requested to grant and set apart from the unappropriated Government lands within the State of North Dakota a section of land to be selected by the said State of North Dakota, in lieu of the foregoing section 36, in township 140, range 49, for the use of the common-school fund of said State; be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the Senators and Representatives of the State of North Dakota in Congress.

A. P. HANSON,
Speaker of the House.
ALBERT N. WOLD,
Chief Clerk of the House.
J. H. FRAINE,
President of the Senate.
M. J. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of state of the State of North Dakota, and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota and the whole of such resolution.

[SEAL.] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution. (Everson.)

Whereas the United States should maintain an attitude of impartial neutrality toward all the warring nations of Europe; and

Whereas the shipment of arms and munitions of war to any of said warring nations is not consistent with the purpose and policy of the United States to be strictly and impartially neutral; and

Whereas the shipment of arms and munitions of war has the effect of prolonging the conflict now raging in Europe: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota (the Senate concurring), That we view the present war as a crime and travesty on civilization and read with horror its daily record of destruction and death; that we earnestly urge Congress to prohibit the shipment of arms and munitions of war from the United States to any of the nations engaged in this war in order to consistently maintain a fair and impartial neutrality toward all such nations.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the Secretary of State of the United States, and to the President of the United States.

A. P. HANSON,
Speaker of the House.
ALBERT N. WOLD,
Chief Clerk of the House.
J. H. FRAINE,
President of the Senate.
M. J. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of North Dakota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Thomas Hall, secretary of State of the State of North Dakota and keeper of the great seal thereof, hereby certify that the attached is a true and correct copy of a certain concurrent resolution adopted by the Fourteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota and the whole of such resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the capitol, in the city of Bismarck, this 15th day of March, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] THOMAS HALL,
Secretary of State.

A concurrent resolution (Gibbens) relating to national inspection and grading of grain.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of North Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring) That—

Whereas there is being considered by the Congress of the United States an act providing for the uniform grading of grain and the proper inspection thereof; and

Whereas this act provides for an appeal being made to some higher authority than a local State board of grain appeals, thus giving to the producers and shippers of grain of North Dakota a right of review of the findings of such board of grain appeals: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we urge our representatives in Congress to support this principle enacted into law, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of such representatives in Congress.

J. H. FRAINE,
President of the Senate.
M. J. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. P. HANSON,
Speaker of the House.
ALBERT N. WOLD,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. GRONNA presented a petition of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Lisbon, N. Dak., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jamestown, N. Dak., praying for national censorship of motion pictures, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Reformed Church of the United States of York, Nebr., and of sundry citizens of Morton County, N. Dak., praying for the placing of an embargo on munitions of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of McLean County and Oliver County, in the State of North Dakota, praying for the placing of a prohibitive tax on intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON. I present a petition, numerously signed, in favor of additional taxes on intoxicating liquors not used for medicinal purposes. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

Mr. BRYAN. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Florida and request that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Industrial Expositions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Legislature of Florida June 1, 1915.

Concurrent resolution relating to holding of an exposition in the city of Pensacola to celebrate the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States.

Whereas the territory comprising the State of Florida was purchased by the United States in the year 1819; and

Whereas said purchase was ratified in the year 1821; and

Whereas the blessings, prosperity, and happiness accruing to said territory, its inhabitants, their descendants, and to the many people now inhabiting the State of Florida are cause for the most profound gratitude and thanksgiving; and

Whereas the immeasurable value, captivating beauty, the extraordinary healthfulness, and the exquisite climate of Florida are unknown and unappreciated by the millions who have never enjoyed its hospitality; and

Whereas the city of Pensacola and its vicinity was the scene of the greatest events which led to the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States; and

Whereas the first American government in Florida was established at Pensacola by the heroism and patriotism of the great soldier and Democratic statesman, Andrew Jackson; and

Whereas the first legislative council for the Territory of Florida was held at Pensacola, and the first statutory laws of Florida were enacted at Pensacola in 1822; and

Whereas the city of Pensacola affords the best and most interesting evidence of the historic past and of the superiority and beneficence of American government in Florida; and

Whereas the people of Pensacola and of west Florida are desirous of holding an exposition at Pensacola for the purpose of celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the governor of Florida is hereby authorized and requested to appoint five commissioners from the State at large to confer with the commissioners of the city of Pensacola and committees representing the people of said city and other cities and the counties of west Florida for the purpose of ascertaining and determining and reporting to the legislature at its next session the manner and means in and by which the State can most appropriately lend its aid and cooperation to the city of Pensacola in the holding of an exposition in the year 1919 or 1921 for the purpose of commemorating and celebrating the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. I wish to announce in connection with the resolution that it is the purpose of the people of the city of Pensacola to celebrate the one hundredth anniversary of the cession of Florida by Spain to the United States, and that at a later period Congress will be asked to take appropriate steps to join in making the celebration a success.

Mr. WEEKS presented a memorial of the Society of Friends of Somerset, Mass., remonstrating against any increase in armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Baptist Church of Mattapan, Mass., praying for the establishment of a national leprosarium, which was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

He also submitted sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 551) granting a pension to Carl A. Shafer, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a memorial of the Single Tax League and the People's Forum, of Spokane, Wash., remonstrating against an increase of armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McLEAN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Connecticut, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint resolution 93.

Resolution memorializing Congress regarding the dumping of dredged material.

Resolved by this assembly, That—

Whereas the dumping in Long Island Sound of dredged material from the rivers and harbors of this State by those acting under the authority of the Federal Government results in fouling the shores, damaging oyster beds, upon which vast qantities of shellfish are in a state of growth and development; and

Whereas in many cases the material so dumped, being soft mud, is carried back by the tides again to become an obstruction to navigation; and

Whereas such material is much needed to fill in the lowlands of our coastal cities and towns, thereby in many cases resulting in benefiting the health of many communities, to say nothing of making land to be added to the taxable valuation of the State: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested and remorialized to so amend the law that in all cases where practicable the War Department, in making specifications for such work, provide that it be done by the pumping or hydraulic method only; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each United States Senator and Representative in Congress from this State.

State of Connecticut, house of representatives, March 17, 1915. Passed.

JOHN BUCKLEY, Clerk.

State of Connecticut, senate, March 24, 1915. Passed.

SABIN S. RUSSELL, Clerk.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, Office of the Secretary, ss:

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 29th day of March, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] CHAS. D. BURNES,
Secretary.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of Charles L. Burdett Camp, No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, of Hartford, and of sundry citizens of Bethel and Danbury, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for an increase of armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Hartford, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide just compensation to the railroads for transportation of the mails, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Court City of Norwich, Foresters of America, of Norwich, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 52) to provide for a commission to codify and suggest amendments to the general mining laws, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1541) to regulate control over all navigable waters and estuaries thereof, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) to amend section c, of article 9, of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1897, with respect to lights required upon certain classes of fishing vessels, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Fisheries, which was agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 24 submitted by Mr. VARDAMAN on the 13th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and the same are hereby, authorized, during the Sixty-fourth Congress, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, and to employ such assistants as may be required to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee or under investigation or examination thereby; that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that such committee or subcommittee thereof may sit, during the sessions of the Senate or during the vacation of the Senate, at any place in the United States.

ALLEGHENY RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 696) authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa., and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 7, after the word "River" and the comma, to strike out the word "from" and insert the word "at"; in the same line, after the word "point," to strike out all down to and including the words "Petroleum Bridge" and the comma in line 11 and insert "suitable to the interests of navigation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a railroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in Oil City, county of Venango, and State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT EXHIBIT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. On behalf of the Committee on Industrial Expositions I report back the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes, and I ask for immediate action thereon. The purpose is to give authority to transfer the Government exhibit now at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco to the exposition at San Diego. It is quite necessary that action should be taken at once. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 38.

Resolved, etc., That all laws and parts of laws relating to foreign exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, including importations of the same, and of material necessary for buildings, or otherwise, for their proper exhibit are made applicable to the Panama-California International Exposition now in operation at San Diego, Cal., during the remainder of the year 1916, or during the continuance of the latter exposition during said period.

SEC. 2. That the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, or such portion thereof as may be determined by the President is advisable, is transferred to the Panama-California International Exposition during its continuance at San Diego, Cal., and until not later than December 31, 1916. And any unexpended balance of the appropriation of $500,000 made in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1915 is reappropriated and made available for expenses attending the transfer and maintenance of said Government exhibit during said period ending not later than the close of the year 1916; and all laws or parts of laws relating to said Government exhibit and constituting a Government exhibit board and authorizing the detail of civilians and Army and Navy officers of the United States in connection with said Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition are continued and made applicable so far as the same may be applicable to the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., during its said continuance.

SEC. 3. That in the passage of this act the United States does not assume any liability of any kind whatever, and does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said Panama-California International Exposition, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of the said exposition beyond the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made in connection with the said Government exhibit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Jersey for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as well as I could judge from the reading, the joint resolution appears to be carefully drawn, but I should like to ask whether it involves any additional charge on the Treasury?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It does not, sir. It requires no additional charge; it carries no additional appropriation. The buildings referred to in the joint resolution are now being cleared from the exposition grounds in San Francisco, and it is desirable that the Government exhibits should be sheltered. The city of San Diego and the exposition authorities there are very anxious to house them.

Mr. LODGE. The joint resolution does not commit the Government to anything that will involve future appropriations?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. None whatever, as I understand.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, it reappropriates an unexpended balance?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is all. I do not know just what that unexpended sum is, but the joint resolution makes no additional appropriation whatever.

Mr. LODGE. And does not commit the United States to anything which will hereinafter involve an additional appropriation?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No, sir. I so understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. JAMES. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Patents the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, submit a report (No. 3) thereon, and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

I wish to state that this bill was passed by the House of Representatives and by the Senate at the last session, but after it passed the Senate it was lost between here and the other

House and did not obtain the signature of the Speaker or the President, and for that reason it did not become a law. It was reported unanimously in both Houses of Congress and was passed unanimously at the last session.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that I have just sent for a copy of the bill which was passed at the last session and also for the report. If the Senator will simply withhold his request for a few moments until I can get the bill and report and compare them with this bill—or can the Senator say that he has made that examination and that the bills are identical?

Mr. JAMES. The bill I have just reported is the identical bill which passed the Senate at the last session. I have the bill and the report from the committee, if the Senator desires to see them, and it is just the same as that which I reported to the Senate a moment ago. It is the identical bill which passed the Senate and the House at the last session.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, upon the statement of the Senator from Kentucky, I shall not object.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. Has this bill been reported from a committee?

Mr. JAMES. It has been reported from the Committee on Patents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let us first hear the bill read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 476 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. There shall be in the Patent Office a Commissioner of Patents, one first assistant commissioner, one assistant commissioner, and five examiners in chief, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The first assistant commissioner and the assistant commissioner shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to them, respectively, from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents."

SEC. 2. That section 477 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 477. The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section shall be as follows:

"The Commissioner of Patents, $5,000 a year.

"The First Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year.

"The Assistant Commissioner of Patents, $3,500 a year.

"Five examiners in chief, $3,500 a year each."

SEC. 3. That so much of section 440 of the Revised Statutes as follows the words "In the Patent Office," and refers to said office only, be amended to read as follows:

"One chief clerk, who shall be qualified to act as a principal examiner.

"One librarian, who shall be qualified to act as an assistant examiner.

"Five law examiners.

"One examiner of classification.

"One examiner of interferences.

"One examiner of trade-marks and designs.

"One first assistant examiner of trade-marks and designs.

"Six assistant examiners of trade-marks and designs.

"Forty-three principal examiners.

"Eighty-six first assistant examiners.

"Eighty-six second assistant examiners.

"Eighty-six third assistant examiners.

"Eighty-six fourth assistant examiners; and such other examiners and assistant examiners in the various grades as the Congress shall from time to time provide for."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as I understand the bill as it has just been read, it does away with the appointment of clerks and examiners from the civil-service list and leaves their appointment entirely in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. It abolishes the requirements of the civil-service law to that extent, if I understood the bill correctly.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken about that. I have a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, in which he states:

This bill carries only 10 additional assistant examiners, 3 additional law examiners, and 2 additional examiners in chief over what have been in the office for some years. All of the additional men will come on through the Civil Service Commission, excepting the two additional examiners in chief, who will be presidential appointees.

Mr. LODGE. But there is a further clause in the bill which provides:

All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents.

At present under the law they are appointed from the lists of the Civil Service Commission after examination.

Mr. JAMES. They have to be experts and they have to be appointed from the civil service.

Mr. LODGE. I think the bill had better go over so as to give us a chance to look at it.

Mr. JAMES. This bill, I will state to the Senator, has had very thorough consideration at the hands of two committees, one in the House and one in the Senate, and was heretofore passed unanimously by both Houses. As I have stated, the only reason it did not become a law at the last session was because of the negligence of some one in not getting it in proper time to the Speaker for his signature, and to the President.

There is no desire or effort on my part and no intention to try to get anybody appointed in the Patent Office who is not under the civil service. However, I am not much in love with the civil service; but the commissioner himself sets out specifically that this bill does not provide for the appointment of anyone outside civil-service rules, except the two men specified, who are to be appointed by the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. I have the greatest reverence, Mr. President, for the opinion of committees, but I should like a chance, for my own personal satisfaction, to see exactly how that clause works in connection with the present law, and so I think I must object to the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go to the calendar.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 61) authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1915, on the day of adjournment of the present session for the holiday recess; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on the same day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowance for clerk hire for the said month of December.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 60) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the joint resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year 1916, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

For the participation by the Government of the United States in, and to meet the necessary expenses of, the Second Pan American Scientific Congress, whose sessions at Washington have been fixed for December 27, 1915, to January 8, 1916, inclusive, in addition to the sum of $50,000 heretofore appropriated therefor and including the same purpose authorized therein, the further sum of $35,000.

POSTAL SERVICE.

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES.

For mail bags, $100,000.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

PATENT OFFICE.

For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, exclusive of illustrations; and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indices, at the Government Printing Office, $56,444.17.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to add at the end of the joint resolution the following:

LEGISLATIVE.

CAPITOL POLICE.

For 16 additional privates, at the rate of $720 per annum each, from December 16, 1915, to June 30, 1916, both dates inclusive, one half of said privates to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and one half by the Sergeant at Arms of the House, $6,240, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not desire to oppose the resolution, but I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. Was not the force of policemen in and about the Capitol, at both ends of the Capitol, reduced in the last Congress?

Mr. OVERMAN. No. It was reduced about four years ago from 80 to 52.

Mr. PENROSE. As I recall, the force was reduced when both branches of Congress organized at the beginning of the last Congress.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it was not reduced at the last Congress. It was reduced prior to that time. The last Congress increased it somewhat.

Mr. PENROSE. Then the reduction was the result of Republican efforts at economy and not Democratic efforts?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am not sure about that, Mr. President. I think it was a Democratic House that sent it over to the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. My recollection is that this reduction was made in a spasmodic era of economy, characterizing the deliberations of the Democratic majority when they assumed control of the House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN. It was done by the House.

Mr. PENROSE. Then the Senator is a little incorrect in the period. It was only a little over two years ago.

Mr. OVERMAN. About two years ago.

Mr. PENROSE. And I can only draw the conclusion that that reduction is now found to have been ill-advised.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, I think it was, Mr. President. I think it was ill-advised to make that reduction. We have not restored the force to the full number; but the Senator knows, without going into a discussion of the matter here, that we have some troubles now that we have to guard against.

Mr. PENROSE. The original effort, two years ago, seems to have been in the nature of false economy.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not know whether it was false economy or not. I was opposed to it, and made a speech against it on the floor of the Senate; but we did economize. Even now, when we adopt this amendment, the action of the House is economy, because we are not restoring the number that was employed under the Republican administration.

Mr. PENROSE. This, of course, is not the only instance of false economy which will be demonstrated at this session of Congress. This is rather a trivial matter; but I do want to call the attention of the Senate to what seemed to me at the time to be a most cheeseparing effort at economy, in line with the efforts in other directions in and around the Capitol under the auspices of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. In this particular case, at least, the majority is found to be in the wrong. I believe there should be adequate police protection for the Capitol; but I know of no reason prevailing now which did not prevail then.

I should like to make a further inquiry of the Senator. What is the reason why we are called upon to appropriate some $30,000 more for the congress which meets next month?

Mr. OVERMAN. That, as I understand, is recommended to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee by the department. We have invited these people here to a great congress; and upon ascertaining the number of people who are coming here, and what is to be done for them, we find that the amount originally appropriated is insufficient. This resolution only asks for $35,000 additional to entertain these Pan American scientific people.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not oppose the item; but while it is only $30,000, it is over 50 per cent of the original amount estimated for, and is another instance where the expenditures exceed the estimates.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3638) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark., to report it without amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the report. (S. Rept. 1.)

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, do I understand that this is a bill that has just come over from the House and has not been referred to a committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. It has been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and has just been reported by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I have no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 663) granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa, was read twice by its title.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is rather an emergent matter. The Committee on Commerce of the Senate have considered the bill and have authorized me to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I merely rise to make an inquiry. Has the bill been reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. KENYON. It has not been reported.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I must object, Mr. President, if the bill has not been reported.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Pennsylvania would hear me before he interposes an objection.

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. The War Department has reported on this bill. It is a bill in the usual form, granting to this company the right to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington. This company has the optional contract for the steel to be used in the construction of the bridge, which expires on the 1st of January. If Congress were not to adjourn for the holidays, then this would not be such an emergent matter, but I repeat that the expiration of the options for the structural steel will cost this company, they say, from 40 to 50 per cent additional.

The Committee on Commerce considered this bill this morning, and, under the circumstances, authorized me to make this statement on the floor of the Senate, to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill and to say that the Committee on Commerce favor its passage.

I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania, under these circumstances, will not object to the consideration of the bill. I repeat, if Congress were to be in session next week I should not ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. PENROSE. Under the statement made by the Senator from Iowa and with the information that the Committee on Commerce have considered the bill this morning, I will withdraw the objection, but I certainly am only fulfilling my duty in calling attention to the infraction of the rule—and a very important rule in my opinion—that no bill should be considered unless it has been reported from a committee. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any further objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Iowa the name of the company desiring to construct this bridge?

Mr. KENYON. It is the Citizens' Bridge Co., which is a municipal corporation. The Citizens' Bridge Co. consists of trustees.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it a bridge for miscellaneous vehicles?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. And not a railroad bridge?

Mr. KENYON. It is not a railroad bridge. There is a railroad bridge across the Mississippi River at that point, but this is a bridge for vehicles and foot passengers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether this bill ought not to go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, rather than to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. CURTIS. That reference is perfectly satisfactory to me; but I think a reading of the bill will show that it deals with agricultural products, and therefore ought to go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I do not care, however, to which committee it goes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the any committee the Senator desires to have it referred.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, I should think the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would be the proper committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

DISTRICT FISCAL RELATIONS.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, by the act of March 3, 1915, there was appointed a joint committee of the two Houses to report upon the fiscal relations between the Government and the District of Columbia. That committee was required by the act to report by the 1st day of January, 1916. Owing to some delay in the printing of the testimony and also by the witnesses wishing to revise their statements, the committee may require additional time. I therefore introduce a joint resolution giving the committee a few days further in which to make its report. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, appointed pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915, is hereby given until the 1st day of February, 1916, in which to file the report required by the said act.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to a bill which I introduced for the creation of a waterways commission in relation to rivers, and so forth. I ask that it may be printed and lie on the table. It is my desire to have the bill referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I should like to confer with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce in regard to it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The Chairman of the Committee on Commerce will take due notice of the statement made by the Senator from Nevada, and will be very glad to confer with him on any subject.

The bill (S. 2685) to create a waterways commission and a board of river regulation to promote interstate commerce by the development and improvement of the rivers and waterways and water resources of the United States and the coordination of and cooperation between rail and water routes, and by providing a fund for the regulation and control of the flow of rivers and for the maintenance at all seasons of a navigable stage of water in waterways and for the connection of rivers and waterways with the Great Lakes and with each other, and, as a means to that end, to provide for flood prevention and protection and for water storage and for the beneficial use of flood waters for irrigation and water power and for the conservation and use of water in agriculture and for the protection of watersheds from denudation and erosion and from forest fires, and for the cooperation in such work of Government services and bureaus with each other and with States, municipalities, and other local agencies, was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for procuring homesteads with adequate water rights and providing agricultural instruction for the nonreservation Indians of the State of Nevada, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CHARLES F. LANE.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the Senate the papers in the pension case of Charles F. Lane, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 37), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Philippines, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to subpena witnesses, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had or have been held in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. STONE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 36), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 33), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the authority heretofore vested in the Committee on the District of Columbia by Senate resolution of February 20, 1909, directing the said committee to examine into matters relating to the District of Columbia, is hereby continued, and the said committee is hereby directed to pursue its investigation during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 34), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and that the expense thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PRINTING FOR DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 35), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That authority is granted to print and bind, for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia, such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary in connection with subjects heretofore considered or to be considered by said committee during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

THE JUDICIAL CODE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, this morning I reported from the Judiciary Committee Senate bill 706, to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911. Since reporting it I have learned that there are one or two Senators who were not present at the meeting of the Judiciary Committee who would like an opportunity to present to the committee some views with reference to a portion of the bill. While I am very anxious to press the bill to action, in deference to their wishes I ask leave to withdraw the report and to have the bill recommitted to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. While it is the recollection of the Chair that at the last session of Congress it was ruled that resolutions coming over from a preceding day should be called up by the Senators submitting them, this morning the Chair will lay before the Senate the following resolutions which come over from a preceding day.

The Secretary read Senate resolution numbered 10, submitted by Mr. FLETCHER on the 7th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate information regarding the value of imports, exports, and import duties under the present and the two preceding tariff acts, with a special statement for the period from the enactment of the existing tariff act to the outbreak of the European war, compared with a corresponding period of the previous year; the value of imports, compared with the value of domestic production, and the expenditure for wages in each industry before the outbreak of the European war; and the imports and exports of leading manufacturing countries during recent years.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent from the Chamber. I wish to ask him a number of questions in relation to the subject of the resolution, and I therefore ask that it may go over to-day without prejudice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution goes over without prejudice.

OCCUPATION OF VERA CRUZ.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution No. 15, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senate is quite familiar with that resolution. I intended when I presented it the other day to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. We discussed it at the last session, and it is the result of the debate in the Senate. I have no desire to have another one at this moment.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator object to having the resolution read?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; I simply wanted to say that I am quite willing that it shall be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania desire to have the resolution read?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CUMMINS on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the President is requested to inform the Senate, if compatible with the public interest, with respect to the following matters, to wit:

First. As to the amount of money collected by the United States at the port of Vera Cruz, Mexico, during the occupation of that city by our military forces as import duties or other taxes or imports laid under the laws of Mexico.

Second. Whether the duties, imposts, or taxes so collected by the United States had been pledged in any form to secure or insure the payment of obligations issued by any Government, or alleged Government, of the Republic of Mexico, or one of the States thereof.

Third. As to the ownership of such obligations at the time the military forces of the United States occupied Vera Cruz, and such ownership at the present time.

Fourth. As to any claims which have been made upon the United States for the payment or transfer of the money so collected, and the names of the persons making such demands.

Fifth. As to the deposit of the money so collected in the Treasury of the United States and the account to which it was deposited.

Sixth. Whether it is the intention of the executive department of the Government to pay out or otherwise dispose of the money so collected without action or authority on the part of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

SOURCES OF REVENUE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 21, submitted by Mr. GORE on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to submit to the Senate an estimate of the probable revenue to be derived from the following duties and excise taxes, to wit:

First. A duty of 10 cents per pound on tea.

Second. A duty of 1.5 cents per pound on sugar.

Third. An excise tax of 1.2 cents per pound on sugar produced in the United States and its island possessions, to be paid at the factory or refinery, a portion of the latter tax equal to seven-tenths of 1 cent per pound to be suspended by presidential proclamation upon the signing of a protocol looking to the establishment of peace among the nations of Europe now at war.

Fourth. An excise tax of 25 cents per horsepower on the production of automobiles, to be paid by the manufacturer, such tax to be suspended by presidential proclamation at the end of six months after the signing of a protocol looking to the establishment of peace among the nations of Europe now at war.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the resolution contains several clauses that are not essential to securing the information. They were simply included in order to indicate a policy. I therefore ask leave to perfect the resolution by offering the following substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to submit to the Senate an estimate of the probable revenue to be derived from the following duties and excise taxes, to wit:

First. A duty of 10 cents per pound on tea.

Second. A duty of 1½ cents per pound on sugar.

Third. An excise tax of 1 cent per pound on sugar produced in the United States and its island possessions.

Fourth. An excise tax of 25 cents per horsepower on the production of automobiles, to be paid by the manufacturer.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Do I understand that this is simply a matter of inquiry?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is not an effort to enact it into law?

Mr. GORE. It is not.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I will say to the Senator that I would be utterly opposed to increasing the duty on tea. I am opposed to doing that, and I think I can say further that I shall be opposed to burdening sugar longer.

Mr. GORE. I simply offer the resolution for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. PENROSE. Would it delay this matter unduly if it was referred to the Committee on Finance?

Mr. GORE. It would require it to go over until after the holidays. I will say to the Senator that, as he knows, it is not customary to refer resolutions which simply call for information. This resolution is limited to that purpose alone.

Mr. PENROSE. I think, Mr. President, it is usual. It certainly is an excellent custom to be followed anyhow, to refer a resolution of inquiry to a committee so as to prevent the introduction of idle, impertinent, and useless resolutions of inquiry. I do not mean for a moment to say that this resolution comes within that description, but being firmly convinced that it is innocuous I shall not make any objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute. It will be agreed to without objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from California.

PREPAREDNESS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE.

WHY SHOULD WE STRENGTHEN OUR NATIONAL DEFENSES?—POSSIBILITY OF WAR WITH OTHER NATIONS.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, an increase of the Army and Navy forces has practically been agreed upon. The people have been made to believe that it is necessary. This sentiment of better preparedness for war has been aroused and propagated largely by interested parties seeking to serve their personal interests; but there are many people who sincerely believe such a course to be necessary to protect the country in case of war with some other nation. Usually the advocates of a larger standing army and an increased naval force put it on the ground that it is necessary to preserve peace. Let us not deceive ourselves. If we increase our military and naval forces, it will be for the purpose of war, not of peace. Placing arms in the hands of a large number of our people will not insure peace. Rather it is a preparation for and an invitation to war.

So, Mr. President, it may be well for us, surrounded as we are by influences of all kinds, selfish and sinister as well as sincere and patriotic, demanding an increase of our military defenses, to ask why this is necessary or wise, and if it is how it may best be done in the interest of the American people.

I do not believe we are in the slightest danger of war with any nation, in the near future at least. We are probably in less danger of such a conflict now than for many years past. The nations of Europe, big and little, with few exceptions, are now engaged in the greatest, most bloody, and devastating war in the history of the world. Let us hope they are having enough of war for many years to come. The war has presented grave problems to our own Nation. But so far they have been easily solved. Others may, and doubtless will, present themselves before the conflict is ended. None will confront us that can not be settled by peaceful means.

But, sir, granting all this, it must be admitted that war between nations is always possible and may happen at any time, as do quarrels and conflicts between men who compose nations. So long as human nature remains as it is, subject to be controlled by selfish and evil passions, men and nations will disagree and endeavor to settle their disputes by force. We need not go to savage or to other highly civilized nations for proof of this fact. Only a few months ago our own country gave convincing proof of what I have just said. A friendly nation, our neighbor, torn with internal strife and warfare, wrecked and disabled by the conflict within her own borders, was invaded by our forces, one of her cities bombarded, her people slaughtered, her customhouses seized, and an army quartered on her soil. And what for? Only because a man, assuming to be President of the Republic, but regarded and treated by this Nation as an usurper without power or authority, had refused on the demand of one of our admirals to salute the American flag, because, as alleged, his troops had insulted it. The President had called Congress to approve of an effort to force the salute that the Admiral had demanded, and while this body was deliberating upon it and before it had reached a conclusion the bombardment had commenced, Mexican territory had been invaded by a warlike force, Mexican citizens, some of them innocent women and children, had been shot down and 18 of our own sailors had lost their lives. Who can say after this exhibition of ungovernable passion, after this slaughter of the innocent citizens of another nation and the forcible invasion of its territory for so trivial a cause, that this Nation does not need to prepare for war? If Mexico had not been weak from internal conflict among her own people, we would then have been at war with a foreign nation, for our forcible entry upon her territory was itself a declaration and an act of war. So long as we have officers in our Navy with so little judgment and discretion as to precipitate or invite a conflict for so trivial a cause, and so long as the Nation itself lacks the moral courage to refuse to enforce or attempt to enforce his demands, we may reasonably expect war and be prepared to maintain it. When such a conflict can come from a civilized and boasted peace-loving Nation like ours, what can we expect—what hope can we have of the settlement of disputes between nations by peaceful means?

It may be taken for granted in any discussion of this question of better preparedness that we are in no danger of war with any European nation if only we are wise, prudent, and patient in dealing with the problems that have and will arise out of the present war. But when the prospect of war is mentioned the specter of Japan rises up to terrorize some of our worthy people. In their estimation we have been on the eve of war with Japan every day for lo these many years. This leads me to comment upon our relations with that country, the conditions that might lead to war with Japan, the result likely to follow the beginning of such a conflict if Japan were the aggressor, and what we should do for our protection in such an event.

Our relations with Japan have for many years been friendly, and there is no substantial reason why they should not continue to be so. But Japan has her problems that in an indirect way, at least, affect her relations with this country. Her population is increasing and her territory is limited. She naturally feels that room for her surplus population must be found somewhere. Her subjects in this emergency are looking for homes elsewhere on their individual account. Thousands of them have found their way to this country and located mostly on the Pacific coast. This is not at all to be wondered at. The millions of uncultivated and unoccupied lands of the United States are a constant temptation to men who at home are confined to a meager spot of land on account of the overcrowded condition of their native country, and many of them can have none at all. They, in the beginning, find employment with others in many lines of industry, but eventually their natural longing for property and a home of their own leads them to investments in real estate on their own account. They are an intelligent, industrious, and frugal race. They have the disposition to save and accumulate. An American who comes in competition with them in any industry that calls for manual labor is at a disadvantage. For this reason and not because of any animosity or antagonism against the Japanese as a race or as a nation, but mainly as a protection against destructive competition on unequal terms, strenuous efforts have been made to exclude, from the Pacific Coast States particularly, not only the Japanese but the Chinese as well. This, as a natural consequence, has brought friction and some delicate situations as between the two nations. It is natural that Japan should look upon this effort at exclusion as a discrimination against her people as a race and because of race prejudice. And this feeling of the Japanese nation is not without foundation. We are admitting into this country many immigrants, and admitting them to citizenship, who are worse in many respects, more degrading and detrimental to the moral and social conditions that prevail in this country, than the Japanese.

As a means of preventing an excessive influx of Chinese and Japanese subjects into this country, laws have been enacted by Congress intended to exclude all laborers coming from those countries, especially from China, and their exclusion has been provided for by treaties between those nations and our own. In the last treaty with Japan no direct provision was made for the exclusion of her subjects, but we had her promise that she would use all proper means to prevent the emigration to the United States of such of her subjects; and so far as I have been able to learn she has kept that promise with strict fidelity.

Besides the Federal laws I have mentioned, State laws have been enacted forbidding Japanese to hold and own real estate. As might well have been expected, this was resented by the Japanese nation and has led to diplomatic correspondence and complications. But however distasteful such legislation may be to Japan, it is absolutely necessary as a defense against an influx of a horde of foreign immigrants that would, as it already has done in some localities in California, crowd out native laborers and landowners who can not live as they live or compete with them in the intensive farming and gardening in which they engage. It is evident that some amicable agreement adjusting this delicate and important matter should be reached by the two nations.

Notwithstanding all precautionary measures taken to prevent the coming into the United States of Japanese laborers, they have come in large numbers and are still here. In walking the streets of my home city of Los Angeles you will see these little brown men on all sides attending the yards and gardens of the residents of the city. You will see a dozen Japanese engaged in this work to one of all other nationalities. They like work of this kind and are peculiarly fitted for it. They seem to be natural gardeners. But we find them in all lines of industry—on the ranch, in farm work, in the hotels as waiters and in other capacities, in the banks and other business houses as porters and men of all work, and in homes as domestic servants. They are rarely seen as clerks in stores except of their own or in any clerical occupation. They are quick, vigorous, and energetic, small of stature but stocky, strong, and virile men. As such they are most desirable servants and employees and are very generally sought after. Indeed, the people of this country are themselves largely responsible for the incoming of the Japanese. They are more than willing to exploit them and profit by their labors, but are unwilling to accept them as citizens or privileged to hold lands of their own.

One of the greatest evils this country has to contend with is commercialism—the exploitation of men, women, and children, especially immigrants from other countries, land, and property for gain. It has brought thousands of criminals, paupers, and other objectionable foreigners to this country who have increased crime, taxed our charitable institutions, peopled the slums with criminals and incompetents, and demoralized and degraded our citizenship. Amongst other things it has brought to this country thousands of Asiatics who are not allowed to become citizens, who are not accepted on an equality with our own people because of their race. They are encouraged to come here for purely mercenary purposes, and nothing else, and are exploited by our own people because more of their labor can be had for less money than that of our own people. They are thus put in competition with home labor, and honest labor degraded until the native or naturalized citizen must bring himself down to their standard and mode of living and labor as they labor or be driven out of employment altogether. It tends to landlordism in this country—large tracts of land held by a few to the exclusion of the many with Asiatics as tenants or farm hands.

In view of the fact that we are looking at this condition of things with the object of determining whether additional provision shall be made by Congress against war with other nations, let us stop a moment to consider what number of Japanese are in this country, how they might be used if we should be unfortunate enough to be brought into war with that nation, and what their presence here would mean in that case.

I take from the census of 1910 the following statement: Total number of Japanese in the United States in 1910, 72,157.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Can the Senator state how many, if any, of those along the Pacific coast are men who have served in the Japanese Army, whether they are reservists or whether they are of the male population?

Mr. WORKS. No, Mr. President, I am not able to answer that question. The statement I am still reading from shows how many of them are of military age; but I also refer to the fact that my attention has been called to the conditions and to the statement made that a large proportion of the Japanese in this country are veterans of former wars of Japan. I shall come to that in a moment.

Japanese constitute 1.7 per cent of the total population of the United States.

California.

Males	35,116
Females	6,240
	41,356
Number in cities	18,612
Number in country	22,744
	41,356
Voting age—21 and over	30,942
Militia age—18–44	30,658

This statement of conditions shows the presence in this country in 1910 of 72,157 Japanese, of whom 57,703 were in the three Pacific Coast States—Washington, Oregon, and California—and 41,356 in the State of California alone. In my State there were 35,116 male Japanese, 30,942 of whom were over the age of 21 years and 30,658 of military age, between 18 and 44 years. The Immigration Bureau gives me the following information as to the incoming of Japanese since 1910:

In 1911 to continent	4,282
In 1912 to continent	5,358
In 1913 to continent	6,771
In 1914 to continent	8,462
In 1915 to continent	9,029
	33,902
In 1911 to Hawaii	2,159
In 1912 to Hawaii	3,231
In 1913 to Hawaii	4,901
In 1914 to Hawaii	4,554
In 1915 to Hawaii	3,208
	18,053

It must not be overlooked, however, that the number is constantly fluctuating as they come and go. So, for the purposes of this discussion, we may safely take the census figures. Claims of much larger numbers are made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator once more?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator speaks of the number of Japanese who have come to Hawaii. Does the Senator know what proportion of the population there are Japanese and what proportion white?

Mr. WORKS. I am not able to say. I have not taken up that phase of the question at all.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Has the Senator ascertained what is the number of Japanese in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. WORKS. No; I have not.

In his interesting and rather startling book, The Valor of Ignorance, Homer Lea gives the following figures as to the Japanese immigration to the Hawaiian Islands:

> Japanese immigration into the Hawaiian Islands from 1900 to 1908 has been 65,708. The departures during this period were 42,313. The military unfit have in this manner been supplanted by the veterans of a great war, and the military occupation of Hawaii tentatively accomplished.
> In these islands at the present time the number of Japanese who have completed their active term of service in the imperial armies, a part of whom are veterans of the Russian War, exceeds the entire field army of the United States.

And, then, to the mainland of the United States:

Immigration by political periods.

1891–1900	24,806
1901–1905	64,102
1905–6	14,243
1906–7	30,226
Total	133,377

And Mr. George H. Maxwell, in his book, Our National Defense—The Patriotism of Peace, has this to say on the subject:

> The foregoing rapidly increasing tide of Asiatic immigration forced attention to the subject, and in 1908 the Japanese Government agreed voluntarily with the United States that in future passports should not be issued by the Japanese Government to laborers desiring to emigrate from Japan to the United States. This temporarily checked this class of immigration, and in the year ending June 30, 1908, the total immigration fell to 16,418; the year ending June 30, 1909, to 3,275; the year ending June 30, 1910, to 2,798.

But note the steady increase since then! Year ending June 30, 1911, 4,575; year ending June 30, 1912, 6,172; year ending June 30, 1913, 8,302; year ending June 30, 1914, 8,941.

Now, sir, taking the census figures, these thirty thousand and more men within the borders of our State would in themselves constitute no mean army. They are strong, virile men, seasoned by outdoor work and exposure. It is believed by some who have carefully looked into the situation that many of them are trained soldiers and veterans of previous Japanese wars and that they are organized and prepared to respond to any call to military duty in this country by their own Government. I believe information of this astounding fact—if it be a fact—has been called to the attention of the War Department. I know it has been reported to me as an existing condition more than once.

I shall in the course of my remarks have occasion more than once to refer to Mr. Maxwell's book, above mentioned, and to make some quotations from it bearing on the question.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator once more?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator has just quoted the remarkable statement that the number of Japanese in this country who are capable of military service is as large as the field Army of the United States. Is the Senator going to discuss the number of reservists of other countries who are within our borders?

Mr. WORKS. I am not going generally into that phase of the subject.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator knows, of course, that there are several foreign countries that have reservists here in very large numbers, and I had hoped the Senator might discuss that feature of the question.

Mr. WORKS. I am not going to discuss that phase of it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Oregon says that other countries have their reservists here. He does not mean that other nations as Governments have sent their reservists into this country?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Oh, no; I did not mean to suggest that at all. I simply meant that there are trained soldiers in this country who are not citizens of the United States, but who are citizens of other countries. They came here on peaceful missions, of course, and are good people, but they never have become citizens of the United States. The Senator will remember that in the case of some of the countries now involved in the European war their reservists tried to get back, but could not, after the breaking out of the war.

Mr. WORKS. I have no doubt of that condition existing here, but to what extent I have not investigated and am not able to say.

I have known Mr. Maxwell for more than 20 years. He has studied the features of this important question that I am about to bring to the attention of the Senate for many years. He is familiar with the situation in every detail. What he says about the condition and the remedy for it is worthy of careful consideration. Respecting the perils of the present conditions, he says:

> No one who has watched the steady increase of Japanese population in Hawaii and in our Pacific Coast States can fail to realize this danger. It is a danger that is already threatening us. It exists today, and will continue to exist every day in the future. It can not be pushed aside. We can not remove it by ignoring it.
> Some unexpected incident may at any time start excitement and cause an explosion that would precipitate a national conflict. In such an event either Japan or the United States might be forced into war by an irresistible upheaval of public sentiment. We had that experience in the case of the blowing up of the Maine.
> There is very little doubt that the majority of the Japanese on the Pacific coast are soldiers, veterans of the Japanese wars, and that in case of war Japan could mobilize on our territory between the Pacific Ocean and the inaccessible mountains constituting the Cascade and Sierra Nevada Ranges more Japanese soldiers who are right now in that territory than we have United States troops in the whole mainland territory of the United States or will have when our Army is enlisted up to its full strength of 100,000 men.
> Japan to-day has the most efficient military system of any nation in the world. This statement refers to the system. Other nations may have larger armies, but Japan's military system, like that of Switzerland, is fitted into and matches with her whole social, commercial, and economic system. It is a part of the very fiber of her national being and not an excrescence, as is our standing army.

But, sir, the peril is not alone within our own borders. Mexico is open to the entry of the Japanese. There is no law to prevent their coming. Once in Mexico it is but a step across an invisible international line from Mexico into the United States. Their crossing the line can not be wholly prevented, however strict may be our exclusion laws or the efforts of Japan under her promise to deny to her own people the right to emigrate to this country. There are Japanese veterans enough in California at this very moment to man and destroy every line of transportation from the East, thus isolating California and other Pacific Coast States, depriving them of all aid in troops or munitions of war from other portions of the country. This would, of course, do Japan no lasting good. The territory she could invade in this way would be limited, but it is a rich and prosperous part of the United States that would afford booty of untold wealth, which would be ruthlessly ravaged and destroyed, as is common in time of war. Japan would soon be driven from our shores, but the mark of an invading army, deep and lasting, would remain.

Bear in mind, Mr. President, I am pointing out not what I believe will ever happen but what might and what would inevitably happen if this Nation should be so unfortunate as to come to war with Japan, and the Senate and the country should be reminded that the proposal of better preparedness for defense rests wholly upon the assumption that war with some foreign nation may reasonably be expected. Otherwise, no additions to our military, naval, or reserve forces would be at all necessary. It is for this reason and not because I myself believe we are in danger of war that I am discussing it from the point of view of those who believe the probabilities or possibilities of war are sufficient to call for defensive measures.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Why should we assume that the presence of the Japanese in this country is any more dangerous as a war proposition than the coming of foreigners from other countries? There is no more reason to assume that we are going to have trouble with Japan than that we are going to have trouble with any other country, is there?

Mr. WORKS. I think there is, at the present time. I will say to the Senator, however, that I am not assuming that there is any reason why Japan should be singled out respecting the number of her people who are in this country and the kind of people they are. I am taking that simply as an illustration of what might occur if we should engage in war with that nation, and I am addressing myself mainly to the conditions on the Pacific coast.

Mr. BORAH. So far as the economic question is concerned, I think I agree with the Senator as to the situation; but it occurred to me that we might lay too much stress upon the menace from a military standpoint.

Mr. WORKS. That is quite possible, Mr. President. It is for that very reason that I have said and repeated that I do not believe that danger exists. The Senator will bear in mind, however, as I have said the Senate should do, that we are discussing this question from the point of view of people who are seeking to increase the strength of the Army and the Navy upon the ground that it is necessary in order to meet some invading force.

Mr. BORAH. I had understood that it was by way of preparation for peace.

Mr. WORKS. I said in the beginning—I think probably the Senator was not here——

Mr. BORAH. I came into the Senate Chamber after the Senator had begun his remarks, but as soon as I learned he was speaking.

Mr. WORKS. I said in the beginning that we need not deceive ourselves; that what we are providing for, if we increase our Army, is for war and not for peace.

WILL AN INCREASED STANDING ARMY AND ENLARGED NAVY CONSTITUTE AN EFFICIENT MEANS OF DEFENSE?

Mr. President, what is the remedy proposed for our alleged unpreparedness? Of course, as is natural, the friends of better preparedness do not all agree entirely, but they do seem to agree that we must increase, probably double, our standing army, add materially to our coast defenses, and build more ships of war and other war vessels. In addition to this, there seems to be a disposition to strengthen the National Guard and State militia, and in some way educate the youths of the country in the arts of war, to stand as an additional reserve force to be called upon in case of need.

Now, sir, there is not one of these that is not an offense to the peace-loving people of this free Republic. A large standing army is bitterly and justly opposed. It means militarism, so abhorrent to a free people. It means the building up of a military caste, of which we already have too much, and the final subjection of the civil to the military forces. Whenever the citizens of this Republic reach the point where they are willing to submit to such a condition of things we shall cease to be a free country. Our liberties will be surrendered to military despotism. Thank God we have not fallen to that depth yet. I know it is said that we are not proposing to establish a large standing army, but it is proposed to double the size of the standing army we have. It is a dangerous step in the wrong direction that will lead to others. If we add a hundred thousand men to our present standing army, we are altogether too apt to follow it up by adding other hundred thousands as time goes on, because, as I shall attempt to show, the increase of our standing army by that much would be wholly insufficient as a defense in time of war and add useless additions to our burdens of taxation. Such an army would not avail for a day to defend the State of California alone against a Japanese invasion. It would find great difficulty in maintaining itself against the Japanese already in the State. So we must, if we are going to be consistent, either put our Army on a war footing of at least a million men or turn our attention to a better and more efficient means of defense and one less dangerous to the liberties of the people.

If we turn to a consideration of the proposed increase of our naval strength, we find much the same condition. If we make the increase proposed, our Navy will still be on a peace footing. It would be wholly insufficient in time of war to cope with any first-class nation such as either England or Japan. Besides, the attempt to provide such a naval force as would afford adequate protection to our long coast line on the Atlantic and the Pacific is out of the question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator stated a moment ago that our Navy was not equal to that of Japan. Does the Senator think our Navy is not as strong as that of Japan?

Mr. WORKS. I think it is not.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will not enter into a discussion of that matter now, but I think it is very much stronger.

With a thousand miles of ocean front in California alone where an invading army could be landed at almost any point, a naval fleet sufficient to defend against that condition would call for an unbearable expenditure of money. Submarines would be useful as a means of defense. Some ships of war should be provided, but no such fleet as would protect a coast line of even that length could be provided without enormous prohibitive expense. The same may be said of coast defenses. Money expended for coast defenses is bound to be almost entirely wasted. We can not make continuous coast defenses for thousands of miles of our coast lines. It would cost billions of dollars. And with coast-defense works only here and there where troops can be landed almost anywhere, they would be of no avail as against foreign invasion.

Holden A. Evans, formerly naval constructor, United States Navy, in an article in the Sunset Magazine of February, 1915, has this to say on the subject:

CAN THE PACIFIC COAST BE MADE SAFE?

The coast defenses will prevent the invasion of the enemy from the sea only when every harbor, every inlet, and every beach where landing is possible is protected by fortifications. With 1,500 miles of coast line indented with harbors, inlets, and beaches where a landing can easily be effected, it is out of the question to attempt to secure protection by coast defenses. The cost of such protection for our entire coast line would be stupendous.

* * * * * * *

The present coast defenses will protect the coast if the enemy is sufficiently obliging to attempt to land at the few places where we have fortifications, and in no other way. It is almost a certainty that in time of war the great guns that are mounted at the important ports will not fire a shot. The enemy will know the exact location of each fort, of every gun, and will take good care that none of his ships comes within range of these guns. He well knows that a naval attack on land fortifications is hopeless, and he will take no risks when he knows that he can land unopposed a few miles away. When a landing has been effected every fortification can be captured by a small force attacking it in the rear.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In the article by Admiral Evans, from which the Senator quotes, was he not urging that it was very much more economical to maintain a Navy and to increase the Navy than to undertake to increase the coast fortifications?

Mr. WORKS. In that immediate connection I think he was, by comparison; yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. And that a navy was a necessity in order to prevent the landing of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I think he took that position. He is a naval officer.

Gen. Story, recently Chief of Artillery of the Army, has stated regarding coast defenses: "The sole function of such fortifications is to defend a port against direct naval attack. Against an enemy powerful enough to land, the coast fort has no defensive value and may even prove an element of weakness as did Port Arthur to Russia."

Troops could land elsewhere and devastate the region all around them. The men that command them might, for a time, defend themselves, the fortifications, and the small territory within the range of their guns, but that would be all.

Then we would have a handful of regular soldiers, because, if the Army force were doubled, we could have no more than that, and the militia. I say it with deference to the good people who compose it, but I regard the State or National Militia as a very poor arm of defense in time of war. It consists mainly of men engaged in commercial pursuits, clerks, business men, and once in a while a lawyer, doctor, and other professional men, many of them good people, but wholly unfit for the strenuous life in the Army and on the battle field. In the trenches, so common in modern warfare, these worthy gentlemen would do little more than add to the number to be slaughtered and take up the room that should be occupied by men thoroughly accustomed to outdoor exposure and trained and hardened for the work. George Washington expressed his want of confidence in these feather-bed soldiers. He says:

Regular troops alone are equal to the exigencies of modern war, as well for defense as offense, and when a substitute is attempted it must prove illusory and ruinous.

No militia will ever acquire the habits necessary to resist a regular force. The firmness requisite for the real business of fighting is only to be attained by constant course of discipline and service.

I have never yet been a witness to a single instance that can justify a different opinion, and it is most earnestly to be wished that the liberties of America may no longer be trusted, in a material degree, to so precarious a defense.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is it not true that the militia of which Washington spoke was composed simply of volunteers that were picked up? They were not trained at all, as I understand.

Mr. WORKS. That may be. No doubt they were not as thoroughly trained as they are now.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They were men who simply enlisted for short periods, from 30 to 60 or 90 days, or sometimes until the end of the war.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly; and the men who are in the militia now are not trained men. They engage in other pursuits.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But the Senator must admit that they are better trained men than those who enlisted in either the Revolution or the War of 1812.

Mr. WORKS. I think that is quite possible.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They gave a pretty good account of themselves in the Spanish-American War.

As to what will be necessary to meet an invasion on the Pacific coast by a foreign foe, Mr. Evans, in the article to which I have referred, has this further to say:

To prevent invasion by means of an army will require a force at least equal to the invading force in the Washington-Oregon district, and the same in both the San Francisco and Los Angeles districts. This will require a trained army of not less than 450,000 men. At the present time there are but about 8,000 regular troops in all the Pacific Coast States. The Organized Militia numbers about 5,000. Therefore, a total of 13,000 men will be available on the coast to repel invasion. An enemy can, within five weeks of a declaration of war, land 150,000 trained men. In six months' time after the declaration of war this country can not mobolize sufficient men on the Pacific coast to prevent the landing of 150,000 men. By the time that such a force can be mobilized the whole Pacific territory from San Diego to Seattle will be in the hands of the enemy, and it will take years, thousands of lives, and hundreds of millions of dollars to regain that which we have so easily lost.

It is also proposed to call into short military service, say for two years, men who shall thereafter be a reserve force in case of war. This would serve no better than to educate them partially in the manual of arms, maneuvers, and the like, but the continuous outdoor training, so necessary to season men for service and make them good soldiers, would be lacking. They would be no better, probably not so good, as the State militia.

Then we have the suggestion that the youth of the country be given a military education and training in the schools. This would be good as far as it goes. It would furnish an excellent physical training that every young man should have. But the trouble is that behind this physical training is the inculcation of the martial spirit, the very foundation stone of militarism. You educate the boy not for his physical well-being but with the thought instilled into his mind that he is being educated and trained as a soldier, the ultimate object of which is that he shall go to war. While I like the idea of a military training as a means of physical growth, I abhor the idea of filling the minds of our boys with the war spirit and thus laying the foundations of militarism and military caste that will put this Nation on the road to military despotism.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will ask the Senator if it is not true that that spirit has not been cultivated either in Switzerland or in Australia, where the system is in vogue?

Mr. WORKS. I am coming to the Swiss system of defense.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Switzerland does not maintain any standing army at all, and yet all of her young men are trained.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; and all of them, I suppose, are imbued with that spirit.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think the Senator will find that they are imbued with the duty they owe to their country rather than with any spirit which would lead them to attack any other country, and that is why they have proven themselves useful in every emergency.

Mr. WORKS. There is no doubt but that reserves trained in that way are useful in time of war. I am not contending against that fact.

Mr. President, the outlook to me is not a pleasing one. It will not be a pleasing one to the American people. It is fraught with dangers that may sometime threaten and eventually destroy our free institutions. The Army we have is essentially a large body of idlers under the influence and control of military despotism exercised through military officers that make the life of a private soldier very little better than slavery. Some years ago I was called upon to defend a young soldier against whom charges were made by a superior officer and brought to a court-martial. The court was, of course, composed of military officers, and the boy was prosecuted by an officer. He was, of necessity, perhaps, denied the much-valued right of a trial by his peers or his equals. I remember that one of the charges was that this young fellow, a mere boy, had entered a saloon, and seeing an officer there, had not immediately retired. I, in my zeal, denounced as un-American and outrageous, any such subjection of one American citizen to the will and presence of another. But the members of the court held it to be a punishable offense, and my client was convicted and punished. I asked if this rule that a private soldier should retire from a public place immediately upon seeing an officer present applied to all places and was informed that it did. I suggested that in this instance, the place being a saloon, the officer might have set a good example to the young private soldier by himself retiring on the soldier's entrance, but this did not seem to meet with favor by the court. This was 30 years ago. I do not know whether this rule still prevails or not. Probably it does. It is only one instance of the humiliating thraldom of an American private soldier. It was no offense for this one to visit a saloon, but for remaining there when he discovered an officer present he was punished.

Mr. President, I shrink from the contemplation of an extension or enlargement of such a military oligarchy. There is nothing elevating morally, socially, or in any other way, except the physical training, in the life of a private soldier. Just the contrary. As I have said, they are essentially idlers. They are fed and clothed at the public expense and add nothing to the public benefit morally, physically, or otherwise. They are in no sense a constructive force. We seem to need them as guards, and sometimes for the suppression of internal disturbances. But being handy, not of much use for anything else, they are altogether too often used in such cases and are to that extent a violent infringement of the liberties of the people. I must say, Mr. President, that while I realize the necessity of maintaining some defensive force in this country and that a limited standing army as the nucleus of a larger force in time of war seems to be necessary, I look with no little apprehension upon the proposal to add materially to our standing military force. Can we not find a better, a safer, and a less expensive way of guarding this country? In a moment I am going to suggest another way of making our future sure, for which I ask the unbiased and patient consideration of the Senate. But, before I do that, let me say a word about the cost of the Army it is proposed to increase so largely. If such a movement is necessary to the preservation and protection of the country, the question of proper expense should receive but little consideration; but if this increase of military power is not necessary, or the need for better preparedness can be met in another less objectionable and less expensive way, then its cost is worthy of careful consideration. I am not going into the subject extensively or at length. It will be sufficient, I think, to quote from one who has studied the question of cost and is much better qualified than I am to speak. Hon. JAMES HAY, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, in a newspaper article published January 10, 1915, has this to say on the subject:

> But, in order to make more evident what Congress has given to the Army and the consequent results that must have been obtained therefrom, let me call attention to the fact that during the last 10 years the appropriations for the support of the military establishments of this country have amounted to the grand total of $1,007,410,270.48, almost as much as is required to pay all the other expenses of the Government, all the salaries, all the executive machinery, all the judiciary, everything, for an entire year.
> Thus, during this period, the Army appropriations have annually been from $70,000,000 to $101,000,000; the Military Academy appropriations, from $673,000 to $2,500,000 a year; for fortifications, from $4,000,000 to $9,300,000; for armories and arsenals, from $330,000 to $860,000; for military posts, from $320,000 to $4,380,000; by deficiency acts, Military Establishment, from $657,000 to $5,300,000; and for Pacific railroads' transportation and the enlisted men's deposit fund, a total for the 10 years of $11,999,271.

The totals for the 10 fiscal years 1905 to 1915 have been as follows:

Permanent appropriations (including Pacific railroads' transportation and enlisted men's deposit fund)	$11,999,271.00
Fortification acts, armories and arsenals, and military posts in sundry civil acts, and deficiencies for military establishment in deficiency acts	113,071,133.17
Army appropriation acts	868,536,993.31
Military Academy acts	13,802,873.00
Total	1,007,410,270.48

However, in spite of this showing of the great expense of maintaining a small army, the militarists keep up their clamor—particularly at such a time as this, and again whenever a military appropriation bill is up for consideration in the House—that this country be saddled with a great standing army. There is not the slightest need of such an establishment. But, if there were some slight indication of trouble with a fully equipped great power, would the people of this country be ready to embark on a policy that would mean the permanent maintenance of a regular standing army of 500,000 men? It would cost this country, at a conservative estimate, $600,000,000 a year to go through with such an undertaking.

The people of this country, I imagine, have but little conception of the enormous cost of our military establishment. This statement of Mr. HAY should set them thinking and lead them to consider whether we need any more of it. I leave this branch of the subject to rest on Mr. HAY's very clear and able presentation of it and without further comment from me. It needs none. But one thing should be done to remove from this question of increasing our armament—selfish influences that are aiding to force upon the country a larger standing army and an increased navy. All arms and munitions of war for our own use should be manufactured by the Government, and it should be made a criminal offense for any person or corporation to manufacture or sell such arms and munitions for use by any foreign nation.

WHAT IS THE BETTER WAY?

Mr. President, I have suggested that if we must, as a means of self-preservation, increase our military forces, there is a better way of doing it than by increasing our standing army. I proceed to a discussion of that question. This problem of national defense is one that has received attention by other nations than our own in times past and different systems have been evolved. The military and reserve system of Switzerland is pointed to as one of the best and least objectionable yet devised. The Australian system has evidently been copied from that of Switzerland. The latter is thus described by Capt. J. W. Neisigh, Commonwealth military forces (retired), in an article published in Army and Navy News, of San Francisco, of date September, 1915:

> It requires that every boy, when 12 years old, shall commence a course of approved physical training in the schools; at 14 years of age he has to register for service and then becomes a "senior cadet" and is taught elementary drill and the principles of discipline; at 18 years he passes into the recruit stage of the "citizen forces," where he remains for 12 months, learning the more advanced work of the soldier or sailor, as the case may be; and at 19 he becomes a member of the citizen forces—the fighting force in case of need. He remains on the roll then until he is 25 years old, after which he is required, in the twenty-sixth year, to attend only a muster parade, and afterwards passes into the reserves.
> That is how the force is constituted. The training is so arranged for that it shall not interfere to any greater extent than is absolutely necessary with the private pursuit of a civil occupation. Generally speaking, the attendance required for training is approximately only 68 hours a year, divided up into evening parades of 1 hour duration, afternoon parades of about 2 hours, and what are called whole-day parades of about 4 hours. This training is supplemented by voluntary parades and frequently by voluntary camps. With the citizen army—that is, those over 18 years of age—a portion of the training is continuous for 10 days in camp, as regards infantry and cavalry, or, as we call it, "light horse," and 21 days for scientific corps.

Under this system it was estimated that a fighting force of between 80,000 and 90,000 troops would be established and maintained, supplemented, as the trainees reached maturity, by an ever-increasing reserve of men who had been through the ranks and passed out of them at the age of 26. This estimate of numbers proved to be exceptionally conservative and is, of course, always subject to the influence of increasing population and the consequent creation of additional training areas under conditions which I will presently explain.

The plan of organization is that each of the six States shall be under the control and direction of a district commandant who is responsible to the minister of defense and the military board at the Federal headquarters. Each State, in turn, is divided into brigade areas and the brigade areas into battalion areas, which again are divided into training areas. In each training area there is an area officer, generally a smart young lieutenant or captain, but sometimes of higher rank. This officer is assisted by one or two noncommissioned officers of the permanent administrative and instructional staff. The battalion command is exercised in the ordinary way, and, of course, the brigade command, which is held by a permanently employed officer of the staff, follows in the usual course.

The relative commands are exercised upon lines laid down at headquarters and are strictly systematized throughout the Commonwealth, every training area being held responsible for the strict observance of the law and the regulations made under it.

The command of battalions and companies is with officers who have either transferred from the previously existing militia or who have, in the first stages, been specially appointed; but it is intended that, subsequently, as the scheme develops, all commissions shall be filled by promotion from the ranks and entirely upon the qualification of merit.

This system, as thus outlined, is much to be commended as compared with other systems. Its one chief merit is that it makes a large standing army unnecessary and provides a reserve force of men who give but a small portion of each year to military training and preparation for efficient service in case of war, thus leaving them free at all other times to engage in useful industries and civil pursuits. Here we have not a body of men whose energies are confined entirely to military training without any constructive force or usefulness, but a large force of industrial workers fitted also for military service by the necessary training and service. But even this system, infinitely better, as it is, than a large standing army, has its serious objectionable features that the people of this country will not overlook nor willingly accept. It, in effect, makes all able-bodied men between certain ages subject to military service whether they will it or not—compulsory, and for that reason objectionable. The people of this country, in my opinion, would not submit willingly or patiently to compulsory military service in any form, although I am informed that there is little complaint against it in the countries where it prevails. But, sir, can we not in this great Nation devise and put in operation a system containing the best elements of those I have mentioned and improve upon it in a way that will make it less objectionable, or without objection, to our own people and more effective, not only for national defense but for national improvement in other important respects, at the same time? I sincerely believe we can, and I am going to tell the Senate how I believe it can be done.

We have more than one evil and need that should receive the attention of Congress. One is unpreparedness for war, another a like unpreparedness for defense against the forces of nature, storms and floods that inundate our valleys, devastate our homes and our fields, and destroy untold millions of dollars' worth of property and hundreds of lives every year; another is our unpreparedness to protect our forests and reclaim the millions of acres of arid lands now barren and worthless, but which may by a proper expenditure of money and an efficient force of workers under Government control be made to blossom as the rose and maintain a population of millions of people where desolation now reigns; and last, but not least, unpreparedness to depopulate the slums and tenement houses and send their unfortunate and criminal occupants out into the healthful and moral influences of the open country.

If we can organize a reserve force that can be so used as to remedy or even ameliorate all of these evils and destroying conditions at the same time and by the same force and at far less expense than the increase of the standing army would entail, and without endangering the liberties of the people or our principles of government, would it not be much better?

Mr. President, let me consider very briefly these several objectionable conditions and their deleterious effects upon the Nation and then I will try to point out a system by which they can be remedied.

I have said enough about the dangers of war and the proposed remedies for it. I pass, then, to the others in their order. The danger of war is speculative, and I believe very remote. The others are not only imminent, they are actually upon us now and need to be remedied. The first is the continual and ever-present danger of storms from which we suffer every year in different parts of the country. The great Mississippi Valley, one of the most fertile sections in the world, and which might furnish homes for millions of happy, contented, and prosperous people, is almost every year covered with a sea of water, its homes devastated, its crops and its flocks destroyed, and often lives lost. The Government has spent millions of dollars, much of it worse than wasted, in the vain effort to stay the floods, keep them in bounds, and protect lives and property. It has been a dismal failure and will continue to be so under the present system. What is true in Mississippi and other States bordering on the lower Mississippi River is true in many other sections of the country subject to overflow in time of storm. This is a condition that should not be allowed to continue.

Admittedly one of the great causes of these devastating overflows of cultivated lands is the destruction of our forests along the upper reaches of the streams that contribute to the great floods. Our mountains and hills have already been denuded of their forests, thus allowing the storm waters of the streams a free, sudden, and precipitous flow, resulting in swelling streams and disastrous overflows that could be easily prevented by reforestation and storage reservoirs to hold back the storm waters that go to swell the Mississippi to such enormous and disastrous proportions. A reserve force that could do this work would be worth infinitely more to the country than a standing army or a big navy. But, sir, while some sections of the country, notably the Mississippi Valley, are the victims of floods resulting from annual storms, there are millions of acres of semiarid lands that, if they could be supplied with the storm waters that are allowed to go to waste, would be made the most valuable and habitable land in all the world. Now they are a barren and desert waste. The storage and use of the storm waters by the erection of such reservoirs as I have mentioned as a means of preventing the storms and overflowing streams which periodically devastate large sections of the country, would, while it prevents such overflows, at the same time, by the same means, and by the same reserve force, furnish irrigation to millions of acres of land now uninhabitable. Would it not be better for the country to provide such a reserve force, constructive in its nature, than to raise and maintain a larger standing army in idleness?

Let us look at it from another point of view. For the purposes I have mentioned an army of a million men could be organized and used with profit and wonderful gain and advantage not only to the localities that are special sufferers from the conditions I have pointed out, but to the whole Nation. The slums and tenement houses of the great cities are the cesspools of the Nation. They are the breeding places of moral and physical degeneracy, disease, and crime. Their inhabitants are a dead weight on the body politic and the source of enormous expense. The effort is constantly being made to get the unfortunate inhabitants out of these places and locate them in the country. Every year immigrants from other countries, many of them the making of good American citizens, are dumped into these places of degeneracy and crime, where they are made in time, by their environment and associations, the worst of criminals. This is the disease that is poisoning the blood of the Nation. These great cities are rotten at the core. There is no remedy for this fearful condition but the clearing out of the abiding places of these degenerates and criminals. What we want is to open up the waste and vacant places where the air is pure and uncontaminated by disease or vice and locate these people there. We must do it or suffer the fearful consequences. Many of the immigrants that come here are farmers and gardeners. Located on a farm or given a garden to attend they would become happy, contented, and useful citizens. Instead the commercialized greed that rules the country has forced them into the cities, into the mines, the manufactories, on the railroads, crowded into insanitary tenement houses or worse, poorly fed, poorly clad, without sanitary protection, and made sullen, dissatisfied lawbreakers, who hate our country and its institutions and defy its laws. Thus are criminals, anarchists, and dynamiters made of men who come to us with good intentions and affording material for good and useful citizens. Would it not be a humanitarian thing, a practically good thing, in the interest of the general welfare to enlist such men in the reserve constructive army that I have mentioned?

Mr. President, I am going to submit for the consideration of the Senate a system of reserves that will not only serve for national defense in time of war, but will, at the same time, furnish a reserve force that will restore and preserve our forests, make our attempt to reclaim the arid lands of the country effective through a practical efficient working body; do the work necessary to protect our lowlands from destructive floods; settle our public lands and bring them under cultivation and make country homes for many inhabitants of the slums and the tenement houses of the big cities. The plan is not mine. It has been worked out theoretically by others interested in all of these needed improvements. It has been brought prominently before the public by lectures and by the publication of Mr. Maxwell's book, Our National Defense—The Patriotism of Peace, to which I have already referred and from which I shall quote at some length.

He says in the beginning:

This national construction reserve must be an organized force of men regularly enlisted for a term in the service of the National Government. The men in the reserve must be under civil control when engaged in construction service and under military control when in military service in time of war. Those enlisted in the reserve would labor for their country in construction service in time of peace, building great works of internal improvement and constructive national development, with exactly the same spirit of patriotic service that they would fight under the flag and dig trenches or build fortifications in time of war.

We must organize this national construction reserve for a conflict to conquer, subjugate, and hold in strong control the forces of nature. We must organize our national forces and expend our national revenues for that conflict instead of organizing them for devastation and human slaughter. We must organize a national system that will create, not destroy; that will conserve, not waste, human life and homes and the country's resources.

We must plan to enlist our national forces in a great conflict with nature, to save life and property, instead of enlisting them in conflicts with other nations to destroy life and property. We must develop a patriotism that will be as active in constructive work in time of peace as in destructive work in time of war. We must enlist a national construction reserve that will put forth in time of peace for constructive human advancement the same extraordinary energy and invincible determination that war arouses.

It will be borne in mind that the first consideration in the organization is civic and constructive in its nature. Its military character is secondary.

He says further:

The duty of the men enlisted in the national construction reserve would be not only to do the work allotted to them, but to do it in such a way as to dignify labor in all the works of peace. It should show the patriotic spirit with which work in the public service can be done to protect the country from nature's devastations. It should demonstrate that such work can be done in time of peace with the same energy and enthusiasm that prevail in time of war.

But in case of war the national construction reserve must be so organized that it can be instantly transformed into an army of trained and seasoned soldiers—soldiers that can beat their plowshares into swords at a day's notice, and as quickly beat the swords back into plowshares when weapons are no longer needed.

Every man employed in that service should be enlisted for a term of from three to five years and trained in every way necessary to fit him to perform the duties of a soldier and to endure the hardships of a soldier's life in the event of war.

* * * * * * *

In this one great interrelated and interdependent work of forest and water conservation; of reclaiming land by irrigation, drainage, and protection from overflow; of regulating and developing the flow of rivers for power development and navigation; and doing everything necessary for the protection of every flood-menaced community and valley, enough men should be enlisted in the different services through which the work is to be done to do this work with all the expedition required by the welfare of the people at large of this generation.

* * * * * * *

It will be argued against this plan for an enlisted national construction reserve that the men would have no military training in the event that the need should instantly arise for utilizing them as soldiers. That objection should be removed by applying to the entire construction service, the Swiss system of military training for a fixed period during each year, long enough to train a man for the work of a soldier, but not long enough to demoralize or ruin him as a man or as a citizen by the life of the barracks or the camp.

* * * * * * *

A system of national defense would fail of its purpose if it crippled the industries of the country by depriving them of the labor necessary to their operation. In the United States one of the most urgent reasons for having an automatically acting system of national defense perfectly organized in advance and ready in case of emergency is to insure the continuance of the industries of the country without interruption, and to prevent any industrial depression or interference with the prosperity of the country. A system of national defense would fail of its purpose if it crippled industries by drawing away their labor.

The system proposed includes what Mr. Maxwell denominates a homecroft reserve—that is, a reserve force of men fitted for military service and able to perform the kind of labor already pointed out, each man to be provided by the Government with an acre of land—I think it should be 5 acres—and a house upon it for a home for himself and his family and the means of making a living for them, thus making an industrious producer of something worth while, a settler on public land devoting himself and his family to useful and constructive pursuits as well as a capable and efficient soldier in reserve who shall be required to submit himself to military training during a part of each year and to pay rent for the house and land the Government provides for him. Of this he says:

There would thus be brought into existence something rare among American institutions—an independent and self-sustaining community of a million men of military age with families from whom the mainstay of every family would be available for military service without interference with complex, commercial, or industrial conditions, and without in the slightest degree subjecting the family to possible privation from lack of food, shelter, or raiment.

* * * * * * *

A citizen soldiery undoubtedly is what we must have in this country, but it must be a citizen soldiery trained and inured at all times in advance to the real hardships of war. They must have the physical stamina necessary to endure such hardships. They must be kept at all times physically fit by the labor of their daily life and the occupations whereby they earn their bread. They must be trained thoroughly and well in time of peace, as it is contemplated they shall be trained under the military system of Switzerland and Australia.

Mr. President, it is an alluring prospect with immense possibilities. It is worthy of most careful and conscientious consideration. The contemplation of it is an inspiration. Let us consider briefly the probability of making this theoretical system a living practical force for the common good. What should be its principal and most important objects and purposes? First, and above all others, to locate upon our vacant lands a body of capable, efficient, self-reliant American citizens with homes of their own. Second, to educate, train, and use that same force, in the first instance, as a power for civic betterment, protection of the people and property of the Nation from the devastating effect of storm and flood; the extension of the work of reclamation and conservation of our natural resources until land, suffering either from too much or too little water, is reclaimed and put under cultivation; the reforestation of our hills and mountains and the protection and preservation of the forests we have; and, third, the training of this great civic and constructive body of men for military duty, thus making them a powerful and every-ready military force in time of war.

Some will be ready to say that the proposed system is impracticable and never can be carried out successfully. It will be urged that we have not land enough to supply homes for so large a body of men and their families; that men will not enlist for such a service; that a man can not live and support a family on 5 acres of land; and that the whole scheme is wholly visionary and unworkable.

Now, Mr. President, let us look just for a moment to these objections that upon a casual consideration will readily arise in the mind of most anyone. The scheme worked out to the full is so extensive and so far-reaching as to make one hesitate; but it need not be, it can not, all be worked out at once. It may take many years to bring it to full fruition. That, however, is the better reason for commencing it without further delay. The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has for a long time been urging a system of annual river and harbor improvements and the expenditure of $50,000,000 a year for this purpose. Such a law could be made the foundation, the beginning, of the greater and more extensive work I have in mind. The millions we propose to spend for a larger standing army would be amply sufficient to finance the system. It is intended, as I have shown, that this constructive reserve force will be self-supporting. Its members will be supplied with homes, but for these they must pay rent. The Government must also pay them for work they do for it, as it is doing now for reclamation and forestry service. The Government must also equip and train these men for military service, supplying military officers for the purpose.

Mr. President, there is nothing impossible, nothing impracticable about all this.

Referring now to the small amount of land furnished to the men, it will be hard to convince a man in New England that 5 acres of land will support a family. But there are millions of acres of land in the Western States and in other places in this country upon which a family can live in comfort from what an acre will produce. This has been proved and is being proved every day. Supply an acre of such land to a Japanese or Chinese gardener or agriculturist and he will produce a living for his family and lay up money. It is just the opportunity that the Japanese are seeking and which has resulted in legislation in California to prevent their ownership of land.

The Government would not have all the lands needed, but it could easily acquire them. The States in which it may seem best to locate the reservists will be only too glad to cooperate in the effort to reclaim and settle the vacant lands within their borders. There need be no fear about that.

Mr. President, this would only be a beginning of the work that could and should be done by and for the Government in different parts of the country. The increase of our standing army by 100,000 men would cost the people of this country $100,000,000 a year. The establishment of the same number of men as a combined constructive and military reserve, under the system proposed, would enlarge the military forces to the same number of men, not idlers living in barracks, but men engaged in useful and productive labor and at the same time as good soldiers, probably better, than those of the standing Army, and in the end cost the Government practically nothing.

There need be no fear that recruits for this service can not be had. There are too many homeless families, too many good men seeking employment and a home, to leave us in doubt on that subject. Opportunities to enlist in the work will be eagerly sought and good and capable men can be selected from the number.

Dr. James A. B. Scherer, president of Throop College of Technology, Pasadena, Cal., one of the leading educators of the country, had this to say on this important subject in an address entitled "The Moral Equivalent of War":

Even Bernhardi is sound when he says that military service not only educates nations in warlike capacity but it develops the intellectual and moral qualities generally for the occupation of peace. It educates a man to the full mastery of his body, to the exercise and improvement of his muscles; it develops his mental powers, his self-reliance and readiness of decision; it accustoms him to order and subordination for a common end; it elevates his self-respect and courage, and thus his capacity for every kind of work. What we have got to do is to conserve the virility and discipline and the unselfish subordination of this kind of training and turn it all in a new direction, so that it will work for welfare instead of warfare, inflaming the civic temper hereafter instead of the military temper as heretofore, but ready, when necessary, for defense.

For my part I can not blind my eyes to the fact that as a Nation we are practically undefended—waiting passively, like some fat oyster, for the possible covetous fork, yet spending $250,000,000 a year in the upkeep of an inadequate system, which is as heartily despised by the militarists as it is earnestly denounced by some pacificists, so that we may reasonably conclude it is no better than it should be.

Nor am I blind to the fact that we are constantly suffering enormous losses from the invasion of nature's forces and that these losses are largely preventable. As a Nation we are eating into our capital at a fearful rate, and unless we begin to conserve our resources there is no more reason to expect our prosperous survival than there is to anticipate the resuscitation of Mesopotamia and North Africa, which were once fertile and populous but have been obliterated as human habitations by the destructive forces of nature, for wherever the natural resources are destroyed the human race becomes extinct.

Forest fires, which could be stopped at an expense of one-fifth the value of the merchantable timber burned, cost us $50,000,000 a year, to say nothing of the fact that our lumbering is so unintelligent that of each 1,000 feet we cut 680 are wasted. Damage from floods is preventable, and yet since 1900 the direct yearly injury from them has increased steadily from $45,000,000 to over $238,000,000. We utilize $62,000,000 worth of natural gas every year, the most perfect fuel known, and permit an equal amount to escape into the air, and our supply of petroleum can not be expected to last beyond the middle of the century. Our spendthrift agriculture is indicated by the fact that our average yield of wheat is 14 bushels an acre, as against 28 bushels in Germany and 32 bushels in England. It is the same with our personal vitality. There are constantly about 3,000,000 people seriously ill in the United States, but more than half of this illness is easily preventable, and if we only used our knowledge we could at once add 15 years to the average length of American life.

Here, then, we have two sets of serious conditions confronting us as students—actual but wholly needless invasion by the destructive forces of nature and a possible invasion by a powerful military foe in the face of inadequate defenses. As students, what are we going to do about it in a way that will make for both safety and peace?

I don't believe in a larger standing army. I believe in a great new working army to supplement our present force and to give a new direction to its controlling ideas. We have been spending enough on a standing army of 50,000 men to support, according to the more intelligent methods used by Japan, an army of a million men on a peace footing, or to enable Europe to maintain an efficient army half that large, together with reserves of regulars varying from 2,000,000 to 5,000,000, whereas we have no reserves of regulars whatsoever. We are no more efficient in Army managements than we are in conservation. As to the Navy, Admiral Fletcher recently testified that a foe could land at any time on almost any foot of our 2,000 miles of coast line for anything the Navy could do to prevent it.

I believe in a working army. Make the present Army and Navy efficient, and then take a leaf from the wise little book of economical Switzerland. Under the civil control of the Government why should we not organize upon the slopes of our mountains, in the wastes of the desert, and along the flood-threatened valleys great camps of a constructive army of peace, trained to the conservation of resources, inured to wholesome hardship, and drilled also sufficiently in military tactics, so that they would find a noble moral substitute for war in saving life and husbanding the bounty of nature, thus serving the State as "soldiers of the common good," yet ready also for defense whenever defense may be required? Not a dollar of their pay would be wasted, but every cent permanently invested. The hardihood of our fiber would be toned up, the loss of billions averted, the pressure of unemployment alleviated, and a peaceful army of a million men gradually built up, inspired not with military ambition but with the joy of creative achievement in the service of the State, and therefore, because they have put their own bone and muscle and blood into it, all the more ready in time of national peril to stand like a stone wall against the threatened invasion.

If Cervera slipped into Santiago when nearly the whole American Navy was watching for him, can we depend upon a greater navy for national immunity? If England can not protect 200 miles of seacoast from the raids of German battleships, can we protect 2,000? But a trained and toughened citizen soldiery standing sure-footed and clear-eyed on their native soil would be our bulwark in war as in peace. Use the present military posts as training schools for officers, convert your new army of experienced engineers into a great band of reservists after a limited service, substituting an earned home on reclaimed lands for a pension, and you have gone far toward solving our twofold national problem of conservation and defense.

Mr. President, I have presented this plan in its broad and comprehensive scope and as applicable to all parts of the country. It can hardly be expected that it will be accepted or put in operation by Congress to that extent. While the principle involved and the motives that should actuate us are the same in all parts of the Nation, the plan is not as easily applied in some parts of the country as in others. It is peculiarly applicable, more easily and less expensive of operation, and greatly more needed for defense against foreign invasion, conservation of natural resources, development and settlement of uncultivated and unreclaimed lands on the Pacific coast than in any other part of the country. The Pacific Coast States are isolated and unprotected by the military and naval forces, and will continue to be so if the proposed increase of Army and Navy is provided for. They are separated by mountain ranges and deserts from other portions of the country. Communication by rail could be cut off in a day. Even with an open Panama Canal succor from ships in Atlantic waters could not reach us in time to prevent a disastrous invasion of our territory and great loss of life and property. As I see the situation, the Pacific Coast States are in much greater danger of invasion by a foreign army than any other section of the country. The increase of national defenses now proposed would be no protection whatever to the people of the Pacific Coast States. If an enemy should gain a foothold there, it would take a long and bloody war to dislodge them, protected as they would be from land forces by mountains and deserts. There is every reason why the Pacific coast should have a large reserve force of its own sufficient to prevent such an invasion at once. What better way to provide this defensive force than the one I have outlined? It would be of immense value as a constructive force and at the same time constitute a most efficient military force if, unfortunately, one should ever be needed.

If the establishment of such a force should prove successful, it could be extended to other Western and Southern States as fast as might seem advisable. It could not be so successfully planned and executed in the Northern and New England States. Lands suited for settlement in small tracts would not be as available or as well adapted to the purpose, but experience in other and more available localities may prove that even there the plan will be practically workable.

Mr. President, I appeal to the Congress of the United States, I appeal to the American people to consider seriously and without bias this proposed plan of national defense, with all of its beneficial possibilities, in order that the Nation may be spared the dangerous influences of an increased standing army, with its enormous burden of expense and taxation.

Now, Mr. President, in connection with what I have said, out of order I should like to introduce a bill covering some of the suggestions that I have made, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The bill (S. 2684) to provide a constructive and military reserve force, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 2684) to provide a constructive and military reserve force, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby created and established as a part of the public service a body of men to be known and designated as the mobile land force and military reserve for national defense on the Pacific coast, to be composed of 200,000 men, to be chosen and enlisted as hereinafter provided, which force may be increased from time to time as Congress may provide.

SEC. 2. That such force shall consist of men capable and efficient and fitted to take lands furnished for their use as herein provided for and to perform manual labor in the forestry and reclamation or other public works, and military service when called upon to do so. They shall be enlisted for the service for a term of five years under rules and regulations to be prepared by the Secretary of the Interior, and may be reenlisted, and while engaged in the civil service, as hereinafter provided, shall be a branch of the Interior Department and under its supervision and control.

SEC. 3. That when such force is called upon, as hereinafter provided, to undergo military training or service, it shall be under the supervision and control of the War Department under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 4. That each of the members of such force shall, by the Secretary of the Interior, be provided with a garden farm of not more than 5 acres of land in the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, and Arizona suitable for cultivation and provided with water for domestic use and irrigation when needed, at a cost in each case of not exceeding $2,000, upon which such member shall be required to make a home for himself and family, and cultivate the same when not engaged for the Government, and for which he shall be required to pay a reasonable monthly rental not exceeding 4 per cent of the cost of the same, title thereto to be retained by the Government. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to devote any of the lands owned by the Government, suitable for the purpose, to settlement by such members, to acquire by condemnation or purchase such other lands in said States as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to acquire or construct any water rights and water systems necessary to supply such lands with water for domestic use and irrigation: Provided, That such garden farms shall be so located as to establish not less than an entire regiment of such force in one community on adjacent homes.

SEC. 5. That as a constructive force, the Secretary of the Interior shall, except for such time as they are required to render military service as hereinafter provided for, if they so desire, employ the members of such force wherever he may direct in the forestry, reclamation, and other public works, and shall construct storage and service reservoirs for the protection of lands from overflow, for the drainage of submerged lands, the irrigation of arid or semiarid lands needing irrigation in order to be successfully cultivated, and generally for the protection, reclamation, and cultivation of lands and works necessary for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of the country and such other public works as the said Secretary shall elect for which Congress may make appropriations.

SEC. 6. That members of said force while thus employed in the public service as constructive workers shall be paid a reasonable compensation, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, and they shall be employed to the exclusion of all other persons whenever practicable.

SEC. 7. That for one month of each year, or two months in any one year, if the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall mutually so determine, the said force shall undergo such military training as may be provided for by the Secretary of War, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, at such place or places as he may direct; and he shall provide all necessary officers and equipment for such training.

SEC. 8. That such force shall constitute a reserve military force and be subject to military service whenever called upon by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 9. That whenever the members of such force shall be under military training, preliminary or annual, or in actual military service in the event of war or anticipation thereof, they shall constitute a part of the United States Army and shall be exclusively under the direction and control of the War Department, in all respects the same as any part of the regular standing Army of the United States. The officers of said reserve shall be appointed and shall rank the same as officers in the regular standing Army.

SEC. 10. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000 annually, for 10 years, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of carrying out the terms and provisions of this act.

THE PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, this morning, from the Committee on Patents, I reported favorably the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. At that time I asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, to which request objection was raised by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

I now desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, and I will state to the Senate that I have talked with the Senator from Massachusetts and with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and I shall offer an amendment that will meet their objections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary informs the Chair that the bill was read this morning.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this is the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] referred this morning, and it is the bill to which I submitted a proposed amendment a little later, and which is now on the table. I may say that the amendment which is about to be offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] is the equivalent of the amendment which I intended to propose, and I am also authorized to say that it is entirely satisfactory to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. JAMES. The amendment, Mr. President, which I desire to offer is at the end of section 1 to add the words "in accordance with existing law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, after the word "patents," it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma and the words "in accordance with existing law," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 476 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 476. There shall be in the Patent Office a Commissioner of Patents, one first assistant commissioner, one assistant commissioner, and five examiners in chief, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The first assistant commissioner and the assistant commissioner shall perform such duties pertaining to the office of commissioner as may be assigned to them, respectively, from time to time by the Commissioner of Patents. All other officers, clerks, and employees authorized by law for the office shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the nomination of the Commissioner of Patents in accordance with existing law."

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I desire to say that the Commissioner of Patents states that in the original draft of the bill he merely followed the existing law, which has been upon the statute books for the last 40 or 50 years; and while he believes that the bill as originally drawn meant exactly the same thing that it will mean after the proposed amendment is adopted, yet in order to meet all objections I propose that amendment and ask that it be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES. I ask that the report accompanying the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The report this day submitted by Mr. JAMES is as follows:

Mr. JAMES, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 900:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 900) amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes, having considered the same, report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that the bill be passed.

The bill comes from the Commissioner of Patents, and the reasons for desiring its passage are clearly set forth in a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Patents, which is hereto attached, from the Commissioner of Patents; also a letter of like import addressed to Hon. WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD, which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 24, 1911.

Hon. WILLIAM A. OLDFIELD,
Chairman House Committee on Patents.

DEAR SIR: House bill No. 18031, which you have introduced, proposes to amend sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to put into the Revised Statutes certain provisions which have been carried in appropriation bills, and to make other changes, all specifically pointed out below.

The bill make no change of salary over the salaries carried by the appropriation bills for some years past and creates no new office, but, as will be indicated, changes the number of employees.

The greatest and most important change proposed is to equalize the number of first, second, third, and fourth assistant examiners. At present there are 110 fourth assistants, 88 thirds, 73 seconds, and 63 firsts. This is objectionable for the following reasons:

Each primary examiner has to supervise the work of twice as many assistants as was the case 30 years ago.

It is not practicable to increase the number of primary examiners, because it splits up the classes to an inadvisable extent, and the only relief for an excessive number of assistants relatively to the number of primary examiners is to have more assistants of higher grades and therefore better trained in their work and with better knowledge of their classes. There are on an average 2½ fourth assistants and 1½ first assistants to each division. I am proposing to equalize this and to have 2 for each division in each grade.

The proposed change will also tend to keep the assistants longer in the office, because of the increase of the rate of promotion. During the first two or three years the assistants are of comparatively slight value. The present minimum salary is necessary to get the class of men we need, but it is only by keeping them here for 8 or 10 years that the average quality of service that is required can be secured. The increase in the appropriation per annum by reason of the equalization of the number of assistants is less than $23,000, and as the total appropriations for salaries for the whole number of assistants is more than $600,000, this slight increase in salary of the assistants will be far outweighed by the percentage of increase of efficiency.

There are a number of other changes, which are enumerated as follows:

First. The bill provides specifically for the post of first assistant commissioner, an office created by the appropriation act of 1909, and fixes his salary at $4,500, which has been the salary since the office was established.

Second. It states what are the duties of the two assistant commissioners.

Third. It increases the number of examiners in chief from three to five. The reason for this amendment is that the board passes upon appeals aggregating about 1,100 per year. This is more than three men can properly pass upon. The delay and inadequate consideration of cases which naturally follow create unnecessary further appeals, with consequent expense and loss of time to applicants and a diversion of the attention of the commissioner from other useful work. Moreover, as there is no provision of the statute by which anyone other than the members of the board itself can be assigned to sit upon it, the protracted illness of one member of the board would seriously cripple its work, and the concurrent protracted illness of two members would stop the hearing of appeals.

Fourth. For a number of years the appropriation act has provided that the chief clerk shall be qualified to act as principal examiner, and this qualification is put into the Revised Statutes. This is very important, because an enormous amount of mail reaching the office contains inquiries which can be answered by the chief clerk if he is thoroughly familiar with the work of the office, but would otherwise have to be sent to the examiners or commissioner for reply.

Fifth. The librarian should be qualified to act as an assistant examiner, because the library is primarily intended for use in making searches.

Sixth. There are at present two law examiners, who are both assigned to supervising initiation of interferences. I am asking that the number be increased to five, the other three men being needed to do similar supervisory work with a view to making the work in the 43 different divisions of the office more nearly uniform. This work can not be done properly by the commissioner, because in doing it he would have to pass upon many questions which would normally come before him on appeal, and he should not commit himself before hearing the appeals. The work could not be done by assistant examiners, because the primary examiners would not defer to their judgment, but the law examiners are recognized as equal in standing with the principal examiners; in fact, receiving slightly larger salary so that they can do supervisory work with advantage.

Seventh. The post of examiner in charge of classification work was established by the appropriation act of 1909 and has been continued ever since. There is no work of the office that is more difficult, and it is a continuing work, since the classification must always be under revision.

Eighth. The changes of salary indicated are all merely fixing salaries which have been in the appropriation acts for a number of years.

Ninth. The omission of the provision that two of the second assistant examiners shall be women is not intended to exclude them, but to remove the possible limitation upon the commissioner. Women make excellent assistant examiners and are appointed whenever opportunity arises.

Tenth. The grades of first, second, third, and fourth assistant examiners, heretofore made a part of the appropriation act, but for several years omitted, the difference being indicated only by the differences of salary, are reestablished, and the grade of fourth assistant examiner will, for the first time, be placed in the Revised Statutes, it having so far been carried in the appropriation acts only.

Eleventh. The number in each of the grades of assistant examiner is made 86. Since the time that there were 24, as indicated in section 440, the number has been gradually increased until at the present time there are 110 fourth assistant examiners, 88 third assistants, and 73 second assistants, and 63 first assistants. The total number of assistants is 334. The increase by reason of making 96 in each grade would be 10 assistants, or a total of 344.

The total number of increases in the force by the foregoing bill is 15, and the total annual increase of salary due to this increase in the members of the force and reorganization of the assistant examiners, if given effect by the Congress, will be slightly more than $61,000.

In conclusion, I wish to say that I can not too strongly urge the need of this reorganization and increase of the force. The business of the office to-day is larger than it has ever been. The number of applications filed and the labor of examining each application increases steadily with the growth of the literature of the various arts, so that the office force is less adequate to do the work which it has to do than it was 10 years ago.

It is the function of the office to prevent the granting of patents which should not be granted, and the insufficiency of provision for its work results inevitably in improperly granting patents, with consequent burden upon the public.

Respectfully, THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1915.

Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR JAMES: This bill carries only 10 additional assistant examiners, 3 additional law examiners, and 2 additional examiners in chief over what have been in the office for some years. All of the additional men will come on through the Civil Service Commission, excepting the 2 additional examiners in chief, who will be presidential appointees.

The bill further equalizes the number of assistant examiners in the 4 classes. At present there are 110 fourth assistant examiners, 88 thirds, 73 seconds, and 63 firsts. The bill provides for 86 men in each class.

The effect of making the number the same in each class is to increase the average salary of assistant examiners from about $1,880 a year, as at present, to $1,950 a year, an increase of $70 per examiner.

The total increase in salaries would be slightly more than $61,000. The office turned in last year a surplus of $240,000, and will turn in this year a much larger surplus.

The new law examiners are important to aid in carrying out administrative reforms which have been recently instituted looking to the unification of practice in the Patent Office, and to more rapid and satisfactory disposition of the business of the office.

The new examiners in chief are necessary partly because the work is too heavy at present and partly because the general speeding up of the work in the office is certain to increase the labors of the examiners in chief.

Finally, the additional assistant examiners are needed to aid in the more rapid disposition of the business, there being such an accumulation of the work in a number of the divisions that applicants are obliged to wait six months or longer before their applications are reached for action.

The number of applications for patents is substantially the same this year as last, differing only by about 300. The number of trade-mark applications, however, has increased in one year by 20 per cent, and the number of design applications has more than doubled in four years, so that the work this year is larger than it ever was, and is steadily growing.

Owing to the slow promotions because of the small number of first and second assistant examiners, 50 per cent of the resignations are by third assistant examiners. After we have trained them and made them useful they resign and go into practice. I am fully convinced that if we could induce the assistants who resign to remain a few years longer in the office than they now do the efficiency of the force would be increased out of all proportion to the increased appropriation now required. The object of unifying the number of men in the different grades is to induce the assistants to remain longer in the office.

Respectfully,

THOMAS EWING, Commissioner.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, give us a larger, a deeper faith in Thee and our fellow men; a hope that shall lead us upward and onward to larger life and nobler living; a love so profound and far-reaching that it may go out in sympathy and good will to all mankind. The past is gone, the future is a sealed book; the present alone is ours. May we meet the duties and responsibilities of to-day with courage and fidelity and be the better prepared to meet the duties and responsibilities of to-morrow, that we may pass on our way rejoicing in life and its far-reaching purposes, leaving the results to Thee who knoweth the beginning and the end. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. To correct the Journal. I notice that it states in two places, where bills were called up on call of the committees and considered by unanimous consent at the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], "no prior report having been made." They were considered by unanimous consent notwithstanding they had not been printed as reported. The Journal ought not to show that unanimous consent was given and the request made because no prior report had been made, because a prior report would not be made in any case.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made. [There was no objection.] Without objection, the Journal as amended will be agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GALLIVAN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution No. 59.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider House joint resolution No. 59.

Mr. KITCHIN. And pending that motion, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] if there is any chance of our agreeing on a time for general debate?

Mr. MANN. This is the beginning of the session, and it is a very important proposition. We have had a great many requests on this side for time, which I think would take, reasonably granted, at least 12 hours.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does not the gentleman consider it mighty important that this resolution should pass and go to the Senate to-day?

Mr. MANN. I think it is more important it should be properly considered.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to say to the gentleman that we are perfectly willing, if it is satisfactory to him, to give his side 3 hours and we take an hour and 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I can understand why that side of the House does not want to discuss such a nefarious proposition, but this side of the House would like to discuss a lot of the items included in this law proposed to be extended that are utterly unjust. I can not consent to that arrangement for time.

Mr. KITCHIN. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution No. 59, "Extending the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes,' approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916," with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House joint resolution No. 59, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 59) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914 (Stat. L., vol. 38, pp. 745–764), are continued in full force and effect until and including December 31, 1916.

SEC. 2. That the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices for the fiscal year 1916 is made available for all expenses arising under the provisions of this joint resolution during the last half of the fiscal year 1916, including not exceeding $6,050 for payment of necessary personal services in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement as to the necessity for this bill. When it was passed the House considered that the European war would last only, or not as long as, a year, and we therefore limited the operation of the bill to one year—that is, to December 31, 1915. But the war has continued and has no prospect of an early conclusion, and your committee thought it was necessary, and, in fact, we absolutely know it is necessary, to reenact this bill. According to the customs receipts while the Underwood law was in operation before the European war began, we lost from revenues at least $59,000,000 in the last fiscal year. We have also lost about $26,000,000 from the internal revenue on distilled spirits, fermented liquors, and tobacco, making at least $85,000,000.

Now, this revenue bill produces about $80,000,000 a year. The next half of the fiscal year 1916 it is estimated that it will collect, if extended, $41,000,000. If not extended, there will be a deficit in the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year of $81,525,000. It is absolutely necessary that Congress shall provide some way in which to raise that amount of revenue. Even if we extend this act, and even if we later extend the sugar clause—that is, strike out the free-list sugar clause of the Underwood tariff bill—we will then have a deficit of about $6,000,000 a month for the remainder of the fiscal year; but if we do not extend this act and do not strike out the free-list clause in the sugar act, we will have a deficit of $81,525,000.

We Democrats know, of course, that this bill is unpopular. We know that no tax is popular in times of peace. It is difficult to write a tax bill that will appeal to the judgment and gain the approval of any man, but the country placed this Government and its finances in the control of the Democratic Party. The necessity exists to raise a certain amount of revenue. The deficits are there, and I believe that we would be unworthy of the record of the Democrats under this administration if we did not have the courage and the patriotism to do the unpopular thing and arrange sufficient revenues to meet the absolute necessities of the Government.

We think that it is absolutely necessary that this joint resolution should be passed to-day. Gentlemen here and at the other end of the Capitol wish to go home and have a recess by Saturday, and this resolution should be passed before the expiration of the life of the emergency tax law of October 22, 1914. It expires December 31, 1915. If we should fail to pass it now, then it would take after the holidays, I think, from two to three months to pass any bill to supply any deficits.

Mr. GARNER. And in that case there will not be any holidays.

Mr. KITCHIN. And it is probable, as my friend from Texas [Mr. GARNER] suggests, that if we do not pass it there will not be any holidays. But, as I say, it is absolutely necessary to pass it before December 31, 1915. Otherwise we would be thrown into the necessity of going to the expense, when we did pass such a bill hereafter, of completely reorganizing the whole internal-revenue force, and I do ask and appeal to every Democrat here to vote for this joint resolution, because it is absolutely necessary, unpopular as it may be.

I desire now to reserve the balance of my time, and I shall discuss the matter at length in closing the debate. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve his time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said that they, the Democrats, were now moved to do the unpopular but patriotic thing in passing this law. They are forced to pass this law in order to save the Treasury of the United States from bankruptcy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My Democratic friends, you and I disagree politically; in no other way. Under the Underwood tariff law the free-sugar clause, so called, places sugar on the free list on the 1st day of May next. Under that law sugar has yielded to this Government in customs receipts for nine months of this calendar year $45,000,000, and if for the remaining three months sugar yields a proportionate amount of revenue, the customs receipts on sugar this year will amount to $60,000,000. The total customs receipts for the calendar year 1915 will yield a fraction less than $200,000,000. Sixty million dollars, as I have said, from imported sugar. You are compelled, in order to save your Treasury from a deficit, to extend this law and to repeal the free-sugar clause in the Underwood Tariff Act, not because you want to, but because you are obliged to.

During the last seven months prior to the war in Europe, at which time the Underwood Tariff Act was in effect, imports which were made were more than $100,000,000 greater than in any corresponding month in any previous year in all our history, and customs receipts during that period averaged about $22,200,000 a month, or an average of about $5,000,000 per month less than was collected under the Payne Tariff Act. For the last eight months of this calendar year, to the 1st day of November, the foreign imports, notwithstanding the war in Europe, exceeded the imports for the same period under the Payne tariff law in 1913 by $56,000,000, and the customs receipts were $77,000,000 less.

It is not due to the war in Europe that the condition of the Treasury of the United States to-day is chaotic. It is due to your tariff law. [Applause on the Republican side.] If you were to have extended the Republican tariff laws upon the statute books when you came into power, you would collect more money than the Treasury of the United States under judicious management would have used during this administration. I say, my friends, that notwithstanding the fact that we have had war in Europe all those months since the 3d day of August, 1914, the revenues of this Government, based upon the ad valorem rates in the Payne tariff law, would have yielded to this country sufficient revenues to pay the running expenses of this Government. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Your Treasury to-day is in a chaotic condition. Your Treasurer has changed the manner of bookkeeping in the United States Treasury; and if there were a national bank within the limits of the United States to-day that would adopt the manner of bookkeeping such as has been adopted in the Treasury of the United States, the bank examiner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, would have every man connected with that bank in jail within 24 hours. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And justly so. To carry as a net balance in the Treasury of the United States the money that is there to redeem outstanding warrants, and to show it as a net balance, is a kind of bookkeeping that I was never taught to be correct, as little as I have been taught on bookkeeping.

My friends, I will not occupy a great length of time, for the reason that there are many other men on this side of the House who wish to discuss this question. But first let me say that the Democratic administration is boasting to-day of excessive exports, a great balance of trade, such as this country never before has shown. My friends, I have selected from the exports, as furnished by the Government in the summary, a list of articles that have been sent abroad because of this war in foreign countries, and for a period of nine months of this year there has been an increased exportation of $765,000,000 of war material and a falling off of $60,000,000 in that time of ordinary exports. And yet you boast of that ungodly gain made, my friends, by the people of this country in producing something to place in the hands of one man in Europe to take the life of another. It is a deplorable profit, a deplorable balance of trade, and yet some boast of our grand balance of trade.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] desire to use some time?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration House joint resolution 59, extending the provisions of the war-revenue act, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 59; and, pending that motion, I move that general debate close in two hours and a half; and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 59, and pending that he moves that general debate be limited to two hours and a half, and on that he demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 164, noes 173.

Mr. KITCHIN. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 208, nays 191, answered "present" 3, not voting 30, as follows:

Mr. MANN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 212, nays 191, answered "present" 3, not voting 26, as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. MAHER with Mr. FESS.

Mr. LOFT with Mr. BENNET.

Mr. SMITH of New York with Mr. PORTER.

The SPEAKER. On this question there are 212 yeas and 191 nays. The motion is agreed to.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 59; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that I control an hour and a quarter of the time and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, control an hour and a quarter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that he control one half of the time and the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. FORDNEY, the other half. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FITZGERALD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House joint resolution 59, extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914 (Stat. L., vol. 38, pp. 745–764, inclusive), are continued in full force and effect until and including December 31, 1916.

SEC. 2. That the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices for the fiscal year 1916 is made available for all expenses arising under the provisions of this joint resolution during the last half of the fiscal year 1916, including not exceeding $6,050 for payment of necessary personal services in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the necessities, as well as the merits of the pending resolution, were fully discussed and considered by this House in September of last year. The conditions imperatively necessitating the continuance of the present emergency tax law are even more apparent now than they were then. I had no intention of consuming any of the time, therefore, in the further discussion of this measure, and except for the strange and unexpected and unfair attitude assumed by gentlemen on the other side I should have remained silent.

We are confronted by a Republican minority which seems to be disappointed, desperate, and mad. They seem to be mad because their wonderful prophecies of dire calamity that would sweep over this country under a Democratic administration and a Democratic tariff law have been blown to atoms and have proven false in every particular. They appear to be desperate because under this administration and under the present tariff law we did not have a recurrence of those awful calamitous conditions that visited this country under the panic of 1907, when the Dingley high-protective tariff law was in operation.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. And of similar and even worse conditions that came upon this country in the early nineties, when the McKinley high-protective tariff law was in operation, and of still worse conditions which visited this country in 1873, when the Morrill high-protective tariff law was in operation, which was supposed and known to be a high-protective tariff law.

What is our situation, Mr. Chairman? I had assumed that in this great body of intelligent and supposedly patriotic gentlemen a mere reading of the committee's report recommending the passage of the pending resolution would have satisfied any man who would be inclined to respond to the dictates of public duty and public patriotism. But not so. We are at once confronted by gentlemen on the other side in the most narrow, vindictive, and bigoted spirit of partisanship, attempting at this critical time in the affairs of the country and the affairs of the world to haggle over the precise method, the particular details, by which Congress, in response to the request of the President and the Treasury Department, shall meet a most serious emergency due to war conditions. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a country on this planet to-day that has not had this precise question, this precise situation, as to emergency taxes, to deal with during the past few months. I here and now challenge any gentleman on the other side to name a single country that has not had this precise emergency revenue situation to deal with during the past few months. And yet gentlemen on the other side, in feigned astonishment and for the sole purpose of playing politics, rise here and undertake to impede the passage of this measure, which every citizen in this country at all intelligent knows is absolutely urgent and necessary. Canada over here lost 28 per cent of her customs revenues during the first few months of the war and levied a stamp tax on everything that could be found to meet the deficiency. Japan lost $41,000,000 of her customs revenue during the first four months, and has been busy, as we have, undertaking to replenish the deficiency.

Every South American Republic lost on an average 50 per cent of its imports during the first few months of the war, and they were obliged to issue bonds, to borrow money, to declare a general state of moratorium, and still, in the face of these facts and in the face of the further facts that Spain, the Scandinavian countries, Switzerland, Holland, and every other peace country on earth has had to deal with this emergency treasury situation, we are not permitted, without the injection of narrow, hide-bound partisanship, to pass a little tax resolution, the necessity for which is apparent to everyone. Over in the Canadian Parliament, in the South American legislative bodies, and in parliaments of Europe, where these emergency revenue matters have arisen during the war, the members, without respect to partisanship, but in the spirit of the highest patriotism, have risen as one man and voted through such legislation as was necessary to tide over the situation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I must confess, Mr. Chairman, that this is a new kind of patriotism which some of our friends on the other side are undertaking to bring into notice. It seems to be a political patriotism, a patriotism that places politics far above a high public duty and love of country. It would appear to be a kind of hyphenated patriotism. [Laughter and applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], to my deep regret and disappointment, undertook, in a spirit as venomous and vicious as it was ignorant, to criticize the Treasury Department for having corrected, in accordance with a piece of Republican legislation, the daily publication showing the exact and accurate condition of the Treasury. He says that the Treasury Department would have been imprisoned if they had been in the same category as national banks for having made these changes, which every expert accountant in the United States will say are accurate and true.

In 1890, under the administration of President Harrison, there was a deficit confronting the administration. Hon. John Sherman drew and secured the passage of a measure under the terms of which money deposited in the National Treasury to redeem national-bank notes should go into the general fund under the head of miscellaneous, and that the notes directed to be retired should be classed as a part of the public debt. Complying with the exact letter of that law, one part of the change, which the gentleman from Michigan so viciously condemned, was made to conform to it. Again, the gentleman from Michigan seems to set the pace of those on his side of the House, which is, on every occasion during the coming session and the coming year, to undertake to hinder and impede the efforts of the majority to deal with the important legislative questions of the country. So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, I want to notify the gentleman from Michigan now that I do not on my part as one Democrat among several millions intend to assume the defensive, in view of the wonderful record of honesty in the administration of every department of this Government, with its absolute freedom from scandal in every respect, with a record of constructive achievement that challenges the comparison of any former administration; and I want to say to the gentleman that during this session and during next year, so far as I am concerned, I propose to go out with other Democrats in an aggressive manner, without explanation or apology, standing flat-footed upon this record of honesty and constructive ability on the part of the present administration, and to meet them in the open field of battle. I do not propose to assume the defensive, to be dodging, to be evading, to be halting, or hesitating whenever some gentleman, purely for partisan purposes, undertakes to impede legislation or to thwart the purposes of the majority. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I wish to show, as I conceive it, the utter inconsistency and utter lack of patriotism on the other side. When the Spanish-American War came on and they were in the majority, they made no suggestion or offer to attempt a general overhauling of the tariff law, although the Dingley tariff of that year was yielding only $147,000,000, as against $176,000,000 for the previous year under the Wilson bill. No; their attention was not on that subject at that time, as it seems to be now. The first thing they did was to issue $199,000,000 of bonds and throw their proceeds into the National Treasury. They had a general balance of $118,000,000 in the Treasury. The next thing they did was to call upon their colleagues in Congress to aid in passing a comprehensive emergency tax law, from which the present law was identically taken. They did that, and within 12 months' time, although the danger then was not so great as the danger and the necessity is now, they thus threw into the National Treasury more than $300,000,000. But on this present occasion, when they are called upon in a spirit of nonpartisanship and of earnest patriotism to perform a duty that is as plain as it is urgent, we are confronted only by an exhibition of narrow, blind, stand-pat partisanship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution and bills of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915;

H. R. 663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington Iowa; and

H. R. 3638. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. LANE members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, when a great political party introduces a measure imposing $80,000,000 in taxes and presents it for immediate passage without affording any opportunity for correcting its conceded injustice and imperfections, it becomes the duty of the leaders of that party to frankly confess that an emergency exists which brooks no delay and to frankly and clearly set forth the condition of the national finances. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the distinguished leader of the majority, has accepted this duty and has performed it on his part; but the administration, whose announcements have been heralded abroad by the press, not only has refused to admit the existence of the emergency but has carefully concealed the condition of the Treasury, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], who has just spoken, has followed the administration regardless of where it led him.

On the second day of this session the President of the United States addressed Congress on the condition of the state of the Union in general, and, among other things, on the condition and state of the Treasury. It had been announced beforehand that he would recommend enlargements of the Army and Navy, which would enormously increase our annual expenditures. These expenditures had in the last fiscal year heavily exceeded the receipts, and the balance in the Treasury continued to shrink as each day went by. I hoped, therefore, that when the President called upon Congress to furnish additional revenue that a full and accurate statement of the condition of the Treasury and of the demands which were likely to be made upon it would be set forth in his message. I knew, of course, that in these seasons of shrinkage in revenue and increase of deficits, the inevitable attributes of a Democratic administration, such a statement would be somewhat humiliating and anything but pleasant reading for the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.] It necessarily involved a confession of failure on the part of the Democratic Party to properly manage the finances of the country, but unless it was made the country would not understand how nearly exhausted the Treasury was and what it would need in the future. The administration not only owed such a statement to this House for the proper consideration of this bill, but it owed it to the Nation, and probably the mass of the people thought they received it, but they did not. The fatal faculty of our Democratic friends for mixing their imagination with their mathematics was everywhere manifest [laughter], and the statement which was furnished was misleading and incorrect to an astonishing degree.

Let me emphasize at this point that I am not holding the President responsible for the figures he gave in his message, which, of course, were furnished under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. I would not want to make that kind of a charge against the Chief Executive. It is too serious. Besides it was unnecessary for him to make computations when he had a calculator in his family; and what reason, indeed, could be given why he should not rely on the Secretary of the Treasury for any figures that he should give out? If, then, we wish to obtain an explanation of the surprising figures found in the message, we must turn to the source of his information.

For myself, I wished to learn particularly how and where the President had discovered that on June 30 last there was a balance in the Treasury of $104,170,105.78. On that date I had received a statement, issued by the Treasury Department, stating that the balance was $82,025,716.03. This difference of $22,000,000, while it may seem small in comparison with some other changes, I thought was worth looking after in interest of the public. At this point I recalled that the Secretary of the Treasury had recently given the press a statement in which the conditions of the Treasury was set forth in glowing colors. You may remember that this statement was published in the newspapers, and that it not only represented that there was now a large balance on hand, but also that there would be the comfortable surplus of $76,000,000 in the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year of 1916, if the present taxes were continued. As this statement appears to be the one upon which the President based the figures used in his message, and is repeated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury it becomes necessary to analyze it.

It is not often that one can introduce a flavor of romance into cold figures, but Mr. McAdoo has done it. [Laughter.] The statement of the condition of our national finances which he gave to the press is one of the most interesting of the recent works of fiction, although probably not one of the "best sellers." [Laughter.] After examining it, I was irresistibly reminded of one of the famous characters in Dickens's works—Mr. Micawber, in the novel "David Copperfield." Mr. Micawber was the originator of the celebrated maxim—"Annual income £20, annual expenses £19 6s.; result, happiness; annual income £20, annual expenses £20 6s.; result, misery"—an expression peculiarly adapted to the condition of the National Treasury under the present Democratic régime. But Mr. Micawber was an optimist, and, like the Secretary of the Treasury, present deficits did not occupy his mind so much as visions of a large surplus in the future. Dickens's famous character has often been considered an exaggeration, but Mr. Micawber's peculiar characteristics are portrayed in this statement of the Secretary of the Treasury. Let us see what the real facts are with reference to the condition of the Treasury, and compare them with the statement of Mr. McAdoo and the outline presented by the President's message.

On June 1 of last year the balance in the Treasury was less than $15,000,000, according to the daily statement. At that time nearly $30,000,000 of the resources of the Treasury consisted of subsidiary silver and other minor coins. It was obvious that if the Government was called upon to meet its demand obligations it would have to dip into this fund of nickels, dimes, quarters, and so forth, and the balance in the Treasury began to look like "thirty cents," indeed. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. TOWNER. I notice that the President said in his address that this is an "available balance." Will the gentleman be kind enough to give the House what is meant by "available balance" in the Treasury?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can not state what is meant by an "available balance" in the Treasury as understood by the President, but I will give the House my opinion of what an available balance is later on.

About this time the Treasury, through the collectors of internal revenue, began to send out frantic calls for help, requesting everyone to send in their income tax as soon as possible, and the balance began to rise. On the last day of June $44,000,000 was paid in and it reached $82,000,000, including silver bullion, subsidiary silver, minor coins, and so forth, and everything else that could then be thought of.

Do you ask how this $82,000,000 could be changed to $104,000,000? Of course the change should not surprise you, as changes are always in order with this administration. The message that contained these interesting figures announced a very important change of policy with reference to the Army and Navy which would affect the Treasury. Prior to this time the form of the daily statement had been changed and the summary of the receipts and disbursements for the year given in the daily statement of June 30 last is different from that given by the Secretary in his report recently received by Congress. A still more surprising change in the Treasury accounts will be found later. Everyone has heard of the postmaster who said that the administration could not change quicker than he could, but he was referring to a different administration—he had never held office under Mr. Wilson. If he tried to keep up with this administration, he would find himself hopelessly distanced on the first quarter of the track.

Evidently this balance of $82,000,000 in the Treasury on June 30 as then made up did not seem large enough to Mr. McAdoo [laughter], as he added to it over $19,000,000 from the national bank note redemption fund and over $2,000,000 cash deposits that he said were included in the revised details, although not received by the Treasury until after that date. [Laughter.] In this way he succeeded in bringing the balance up to a little over $104,000,000, as before stated. His excuse for including the amount due of the bank note redemption fund in the assets is that it was made by law a part of the public debt and was included therein; but it was a current liability, changing from day to day, payable on demand, which could not properly be part of a working balance. As to the cash deposits, as a matter of course they had never been counted except on the day they were received. An interesting fact in relation to this two million and odd dollars of cash deposits which the Secretary counts as of June 30, although not received until July 1, is that the balance in the Treasury on July 1 dropped to $76,157,831.33, including the selfsame cash deposits which Mr. McAdoo now counts in with those of the day before. Apparently the Treasury officials had been doing some "window dressing" by withholding large payments until after the fiscal year. This would not matter so much if Mr. McAdoo had not taken this same balance of June 30, which he had raised $22,000,000, and in his press statement made the amount of the balance the same for July 1 as for June 30, namely, $104,170,105.78, when the daily statement for July 1 showed that there was in fact only a little over $76,000,000 on that day. Even if we include the amount of the redemption fund for July 1, which was $19,484,788, Mr. McAdoo's press statement would be over $8,000,000 in error for July 1. These changes aptly exemplify Mr. McAdoo's financial genius. We have had some great Secretaries of the Treasury, but never before one who could succeed in having the same deposit credited on two different days or who could change a liability into an asset.

However remarkable the statement prepared by Mr. McAdoo and used by the President may seem, it is modest compared to some of the figures created by the Secretary.

After June 1 for the next three months the balance shrunk over $35,000,000, or nearly $12,000,000 per month. The excess of disbursements was larger than for the same months of 1914, and at the same rate for three months more would have found the Treasury practically empty. The balance in the Treasury as found in the daily statement of September 30 last was $40,898,894.97. The situation was somewhat alarming, but Mr. McAdoo promptly arose to the occasion. In fact, he took a Zeppelin excursion into the clouds and marked the balance up overnight to $128,063,545.23. Webster said Hamilton smote the rock of the public resources and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth, but Hamilton never achieved such a stroke as this. [Applause on the Republican side.] With such a Secretary it is evident that our Treasury never can become bankrupt, no matter how much the disbursements may exceed the receipts. But do you ask how the Secretary arrived at these figures? Easy enough. He not only put in the amount of the redemption fund before referred to, but included $61,089,225.97 which had been placed to the credit of disbursing officers with which to meet various debts of the Government. It was very simple, but somehow no one had ever thought of it before, and consequently disbursing officers' balances after being taken out of the Treasury were not counted as if they were still in it.

What I have said does not present a complete view of the statement given to the press by the Secretary of the Treasury. In it he hopefully predicted that the disbursements for the ensuing fiscal year would be less than for the previous year. At the outset I had a distinct reluctance to accept his prophecies, remembering his predictions for the year before, and that when June 1 came the disbursements had exceeded the receipts by $64,165,416.78, according to the daily statement to which I always adhere. These figures, of course, have been changed also and are now given differently in the report of the Secretary and in the President's message. The excess of disbursements over receipts as given in the Secretary's report is $57,442,509.75. I pass this over, as one who is reviewing the changes in the reports can hardly afford to pay attention to little discrepancies of six or seven millions.

I have not time to take up in detail the estimates made for the fiscal year of 1916, but why should the Secretary of the Treasury estimate the disbursements for 1916 at $7,000,000 less for this fiscal year than for 1915? Instead of being less, it is extremely likely that they will need many millions more, as it will take at least $10,000,000 to make up the deficiency in the Post Office revenues alone. According to the Secretary's own estimates, the disbursements will exceed the receipts by $27,000,000, even if the war tax and sugar duties are continued. How serious the situation is can best be understood by considering the condition of the Treasury for the last month, in which there were many days when, if the amount of subsidiary silver coin, minor coin, silver bullion, bank-note redemption fund, and disbursing officers' credits were deducted, the balance would actually be on the wrong side. The President told us quite properly that there should be a working balance of $50,000,000 in the Treasury. This bill will not satisfy the needs of the Treasury. There will be no such working balance in the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year unless additional taxes are laid above those provided by the bill and now in force. The working balance and the McAdoo balance are two very different things.

When we consider the necessities of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, we are informed by Mr. FITZGERALD, the very able chairman of the Appropriations Committee, that at least $137,000,000 of additional revenue will be required for the increase asked for by the War and Navy Departments. Then there are other large items which must be included—at least $5,000,000 for railroads in Alaska, to say nothing of any appropriations for rivers and harbors, public buildings, Reclamation Service, and $40,000,000 for the ship-purchase bill. How, under these conditions, it can be considered that it will be sufficient for the next fiscal year, 1917, to obtain $112,000,000 of new revenue, as stated in the President's message, is beyond me. It would seem that $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 additional would be nearer the amount required, which, of course, can not be definitely determined until the appropriation bills are made up.

Whatever may be thought with reference to the additional revenue needed, it is quite plain that the administration has brought the Treasury dangerously near bankruptcy, and by twisting and shifting its methods of bookkeeping has sought to conceal the real situation. The burdensome and vexatious direct taxes which have been levied in times of peace are clearly insufficient to maintain a reasonable working balance in the Treasury, but the prospect is that the American people will have still more stamps to moisten, in view of the need of the Treasury for additional revenue and the disposition of the administration to put the burden of its failure upon those who ought not to bear it. The Micawber of the Treasury will doubtless continue to exploit his visions, but out of all these masses of contradictory figures, in spite of the fog with which they have been covered, the people will understand that the National Treasury no longer has a real working balance.

Mr. Speaker, much will be said at this session with reference to proper preparation for defense, and we will be told that war may come suddenly and unexpectedly, like a bolt from a clear sky. Such being the situation, the first preparation that we should make is to create in the Treasury a free fund of at least $50,000,000, which could be used for any emergency which might arise overnight. Until the Treasury is so supplied we will not be prepared for war, nor even for the incidents of peace. This bill is insufficient for that purpose and will not create such a fund, which will only be supplied by a protective tariff under a Republican administration. [Long applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this resolution, not on account of the resolution itself so much as because it seeks to fasten for another year upon the American people a tax that I believe to be essentially wrong in principle, because it is a tax burdensome and oppressive, and imposed on objects and ordinary transactions of business never before taxed in the history of this country except in time of war.

I realize, however, the condition that confronts us, and therefore I shall content myself with merely recording my name against the passage of this resolution and not attempting to block it either by obstruction or by amendment, much as it needs amendment.

The situation simply is—and it was brought out in the strenuously enthusiastic speech of the leader of the majority an hour ago [laughter on the Republican side]—that if we do not pass this resolution before the Christmas adjournment or recess the Treasury will be bankrupt.

It is useless to attempt to conceal the true state of affairs, either by wit or sophistry or financial legerdemain. To anyone who has at all followed the history of the Treasury balance for the past year the situation to-day is obvious. The fiscal year of 1915 started with a balance in the Treasury of $145,835,502.10. On the 11th of the following June the balance had shrunk to $17,780,831.39, a loss of more than $127,000,000, or an average loss of more than $10,000,000 a month. In the last few days of June, however, a windfall came; the screws had been turned and twisted to exact the last pound of flesh out of the payers of the income tax, and the balance rose on the 30th of June to $82,025,716.03; not $104,000,000, but to about $82,000,000. Again the process of erosion set in, to such an extent that on the 30th of September the balance had fallen to $40,898,894.26, a loss of more than $41,000,000, or an average loss per month of more than $13,000,000. Then, marvelous to relate, we awoke the next morning to find that the balance in the Treasury was announced to be $128,063,545.23.

Was this another windfall, such as had come in the closing days of June? Had any money come into the Treasury? Had $88,000,000, like manna from heaven, fallen into the Treasury? Not at all. There was actually less money in the Treasury on the 1st of October than there was on the day previous. We were told that the reason for it was that the Treasury Department had adopted a new method of bookkeeping; that the old method hitherto pursued by the administration had become antiquated, and a newer and more enlightened method had been adopted instead. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing new about this method. It is as old as the hills. It has been going on ever since figures were invented. It is simply the process of padding figures to give to those interested a roseate, but an entirely false, view of the situation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have done, gentlemen, what you would have been the first to condemn if it had been done by any others. I shall refer to only one of the items that you have included in your Treasury available cash balance. Suppose a railroad company, for instance, in its statement to the public should include as a part of its available cash sums that have been appropriated for specific purposes only. What would you call it? I venture to believe that you gentlemen on the other side of this House would have called that "high finance" of the most pernicious kind, and you would have been right. You may call this system modern finance. I call it jugglery. But even these new and enlightened methods have not prevented the process of erosion of your Treasury balance from going on. Your $128,000,000 had shrunk on the opening day of this Congress, December 6, to $116,871,284.79. Yesterday morning it was $107,600,970.35. You had lost over $20,000,000 from the 1st of October, and you have lost over $9,000,000 since this Congress has been in session. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, there is a perfectly easy way to find out what the Treasury balance is to-day. Subtract $88,000,000, the amount you padded it with in October, from the present balance of $107,000,000, and what is the answer? About $20,000,000.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], now presiding over this House, need give himself no concern that the knowledge on this side of the House of the true state of affairs will encourage our rapacity. On the contrary, I will say to the gentleman from New York that it simply inspires in us only feelings of grave concern for the future of this country, so long as the Democratic administration shall remain in power. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The fact is that our condition to-day is substantially the same as it was about the middle of last June, but we have not any windfall to look forward to, such as took place then. We have got to wait six months before the returns of the income tax come in, when we had then to wait only a week; and this paltry $20,000,000 that to-day represents the real balance in the Treasury, when we consider that we have been losing about a million dollars a day since this Congress went into session, is apt right speedily, like the voyagers in the "Hunting of the Snark," "to softly and suddenly vanish away and never be heard from again." [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

You are right in one thing. There is urgent necessity, under your revenue system, of passing this resolution. We on this side have no disposition to prevent you, although we have been called unpatriotic. But we do not propose to stultify ourselves by voting to perpetuate even for a year a system of taxation odious and unjustifiable in time of peace in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] That it is necessary now is only because your tariff law has proved itself not only destructive of industry, but impotent to raise the revenue necessary for the maintenance of this Government, war or no war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The American people are patriotic. They are willing to pay their share of the expenses of Government, and they are willing to pay heavily of their treasure in time of stress and danger. But you will find that they do not like to pay emergency taxes when no emergency exists. You will find that they do not like to pay war taxes when there is no war. There would never have been any necessity for the taxes you are about to continue if you had not destroyed—deliberately destroyed—a large part of the revenue formerly collected at the customhouses of this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. You can not substantiate the claim that the European war is in any real degree responsible. Your deficit was growing before the war started or was even dreamed of, in spite of the fact that importations of enormous proportions have continued to flow and are to-day flowing into this country. It is not the quantity of the imports, but the duties imposed and collected upon them, that have made the deficit and played hob with your revenue.

As a discourager of American industry your tariff is a brilliant success. As a producer of revenue it is a sorry failure. The history of this administration abundantly illustrates the essential difference between the rival revenue policies of the Republican and Democratic Parties. Under our method stimulated trade and industry go hand in hand with adequate revenue. Under yours inadequate revenue walks over prostrate industry. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You may reply that to-day prosperity prevails in the land. Of course it does, but it is a sporadic prosperity, due almost entirely to our prodigious export trade, with which you have nothing whatever to do, and based upon the greatest calamity of the ages. Woe to American industry, I say, if this war shall cease and competitive conditions be restored before the Underwood law is repealed. [Applause on the Republican side.] Heaven protect American labor if this thing happens before protective duties are restored. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You say that this is but the beginning of the imposition of other and far-reaching direct taxes. If you are sincere, as we are on this side of the House, in your desire for adequate preparedness, you will need them, unless you are willing to adopt our method of raising revenue.

But this is not the time for the discussion of these questions. That will come later. In the meantime, we will not seek to prevent the prolongation for a year of your present method of direct taxation, but we suggest to you that in the future you may not find it so easy. We are for preparedness and we are willing to pay for it, but we propose to have something to say about the method by which necessary revenue shall be raised.

I now yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman used two minutes and yields back three minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman from North Carolina use some of his time now?

Mr. KITCHIN. We shall have but one more speech on this side, which will close the debate.

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, the approaching holiday season, with all its various festivities, is anticipated by all of us. There are special celebrations of events, important to some and observed with interest by all. In other times and other seasons great rulers and statesmen, on festal occasions like those now approaching, would undoubtedly have extended to the common people of the Nation the hand of generosity; but to-day this Congress, with the infliction of this burden of taxation, lands on the American people with the clenched fist of oppression. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The time is short, but I deem it a duty to protest against this burdensome, offensive, and repugnant tax.

But we are advised that we should not resent it, that we should not wince, and perhaps that is true; for to-day the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is punishing the American people with a whip for their indiscretion in 1912, while from yonder platform on the 7th of December the President of the United States announced that later on we would be punished with a scorpion in the form of a bill that will add to the terms of this burdensome law.

But the people are patient. The people are long-suffering. I presume they will bend under the load and punishment of that indiscretion which turned the control of this Government over to cunning contrivers of taxes. But it seems to me that they will be warranted in being patient; because, looking forward, they know that there must come an end of all things, and that among the days that are to come, March 4, 1917, looms up in the distance. Were not the elections of last November to the party in control an emphatic notice to quit? [Applause on the Republican side.]

The leader of the majority in his speech presenting this resolution said it was thought when this bill was presented last year that the war would have closed by the 1st of January, 1916. If that was true, then the bill was not drawn with reference to that thought, because the bill that was presented in this House and voted upon in this House fixed no limitation to the life of the tax law, save and except the stamp tax. It was so cunningly arranged that the bill would not only outlast the European war, but so far as this administration is concerned it would be a perpetual tax. Although I called this fact to the attention of the majority of this House in that Congress—a great deal larger majority, by the way, than the present one—no attention was paid to it, and it remained for the Senate to take up the feature of limitation and place upon the bill the limitation which we find in the present law.

I am sorry that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] saw fit to impugn and attack the patriotism of this side of the House. Yet my sorrow is diminished a great deal when I remember that if from any source on earth the great body of people represented by those on this side of the House would have their patriotism impugned, it would be by the gentleman from Tennessee. [Applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] said that in the next campaign he would "go out and stand flat-footed"—I would like to see the gentleman standing flat-footed—upon the Baltimore platform, with its bending, warping, breaking, vanishing planks. A moving picture of that spectacle sold to advantage would finance the next campaign of almost any anti-Democratic Party to victory. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The gentleman said that we had a panic in 1907 and would charge it to Republican policies. I say this to the gentleman from Tennessee, that during the first calendar year in which the Underwood tariff law was in operation there were more failures in the United States, carrying a larger excess of liabilities over assets, than in 1907, 1908, or any other year in the history of this Nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I submit a record of the number of failures and the excess of liabilities over assets for certain record calendar years in our recent history.

Year.	Number.	Excess of liabilities over assets.
1914	16,759	$162,313,407
1913	14,553	134,800,000
1908	14,044	127,500,000
1907	10,265	95,900,000
1896	15,094	99,100,000
1893	15,508	150,000,000

This shows 1914 as having 1,251 more failures than the next highest year in our history. It shows the excess of liability over assets for 1914, $11,713,407 more than in 1893 and $66,513,407 over 1907.

And during 1914, which had seven months of the Underwood tariff law—and there was no war going in Europe—there was a greater shrinkage in values of sound and stable properties and securities, more idle freight cars, and more laborers thrown out of employment than in any other year in our national history.

I oppose this bill because it is founded on two definite wrongs. One is that if the party in power had lived up to their pledge solemnly made in Baltimore, for that economy for which the chairman of this committee so vainly pleaded, there would be money in the Treasury now to run this Government. Further than that, if the Underwood tariff law had been fair to all the industries of this country, and if it had been drawn in line with its pledge for the raising of revenue, and had not been a rank discrimination between industries and between sections, there would still be considerable money in the Treasury to run this Government and this infamous tax need not have been extended.

Ah, but the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] said that on a former occasion, when this side of the House presented a revenue bill of similar character, that side—the Democratic—of the House, substantially to a man, patriotically supported it. I have before me the record of the votes on that bill. The bill was passed April 29, 1898. As I read that list I find that not only on the passage of that bill but when it came back from the Senate and House conferees the vote was Republicans for the bill and Democrats against it, with a few marked exceptions on either side. I find that Mr. Cummings, of New York, and Gen. Joseph Wheeler stood almost alone on their side of the House supporting the bill, while the great mass of their partisans voted against the bill, although this Nation was then actually involved in a great war.

I note among those voting against that bill, not to reflect upon them, but to refute the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL], the following, who are still in public life: ADAMSON, BROUSSARD, CLARK, HENRY, LLOYD, MOON, SHAFROTH, SIMS, SLAYDEN, SPARKMAN, STEPHENS, SWANSON, TALBOTT, and UNDERWOOD.

I recently reread, Mr. Chairman, that matchless lecture of Wendell Phillips on "The Lost Arts." I was interested in the manner in which he read into the record of the ancient ruins and writings, the inventions, discoveries, and appliances that we call our modern arts. But in all the list presented in his matchless manner and eloquence I found not the art of bookkeeping. That noble art seems not to have been rediscovered by the ingenious and eloquent Wendell. A reference might be found to it in the writings of the recording angel; but whatever there was anciently to that profession it never reached the perfection of modern official application.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska two minutes more.

Mr. SLOAN. We who in our homes from day to day during vacation saw the falling column of cash in the National Treasury with grave apprehension, wondered what soon must occur. On the last day of September or the first of October, or in the witching hour between the months when "graveyards yawn," that a magician in the Treasury waved his wand, and suddenly debts became credits, liabilities became assets, and obligations became resources. It exemplified what old Si Smith in our country said after he failed in business. When he was asked what he was going to do, he said: "I am going to live on the interest of my debts." So it is expected that the Treasury of the United States will prosper and grow on what it owes. [Laughter.]

The people object to this expense, because if they have a magician in the Treasury who can by the waving of a wand, or the exercise of a decree or fiat, breathe into or wish $80,000,000 into the Treasury, what is the use of the tax? Why McAdoo about it? [Laughter.] Wave the wand and do away with the tax, or else what is the use of having a magician in the Treasury.

I was at Leavenworth a few years ago, taking depositions in the institution down there belonging to the Government, where the long-term guests of the United States are housed, fed, and worked. My attention was called to a group called "the bankers squad." I asked one of them why he was not in his bank. He said: "Well, I evolved a new system of bookkeeping, which I followed for a couple of years until the authorities uncovered it, and that is why I am not in the bank." [Laughter.]

That is one reason why the bookkeeper at the end of the Avenue will not be long retained by the people of the United States. If there is one important fact established from the authoritative statements of the majority leader in the preference of his party for taxes upon persons, business, and industries of Americans, rather than upon the foreign products, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the foreign producers who would enjoy the American market, which heretofore was and hereafter is to be the best in the world, should pay a large share of the American taxes, and not the American laborers, farmers, and business men. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in five minutes' time I can not undertake to exhaustively talk about this bill or the condition of the Treasury. In that five minutes of time, however, I desire to be entirely practical and entirely nonpartisan. [Laughter.] Gentlemen on the other side laugh, all right. The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it. I am an American citizen; I am a Republican. I disagree with the other side of the House touching taxation, in many other respects, but especially from an economic standpoint. They had full power to put their policy on the statute book. Probably they were bound to do it. I guess they were, under their platform, and they kept it in that respect. We have had a trial of it. You say on account of the war there is a deficit; we say the deficit happened before the war.

But what I say and what you say does not make it correct. I have not the time to discuss what the fact is, but it is absolutely certain that, as an American citizen and a Representative, it is my duty to contribute to the welfare of the Republic, and I am ready to do it. And yet I must be allowed the poor privilege of saying how you might have done it better, not only for public sentiment, but for the Treasury and the well-being of all the people.

Here is a revenue law called a war-revenue tax law that will expire the last day of this year. You want to extend it. Your President, when he addressed the House a few days ago, to which address I listened with great attention, said that to continue this law would not be sufficient; that you have large amounts of money to gather into the Treasury from taxation, and he recommended how that should be done. I do not agree with his recommendations. I am for appropriating money where the public welfare requires and for providing money to pay the appropriations. Now, I put it to that side of the House in all fairness. You gave notice and your President has given notice that this is only a starter; that later on in this session, between this and the close of the fiscal year on the 30th of June, you are again to bring in revenue bills that will increase taxation. Do you not think that when you pass this bill you might limit it to three months or six months, or, perchance, to the end of this session of Congress? It seems to me that it ought to be so limited, and then when you bring in other tax bills you can include this bill and we can take the dose all at one time.

There is another way to get revenue. The President is not pleased with it. There are $222,000,000 of Panama bonds in the Treasury. We proposed when we authorized that work to build it by bonds, but lo and behold, under a Republican policy, with constantly increasing expenses, the Treasury was filled and filled until we paid all the expenditures, and then, lo and behold, there were $222,000,000 of these bonds that we did not use, because we paid all of the expenses out of the Treasury, money that came in under the Republican policy. [Applause.] These bonds can be, under the law, issued by the President at any time and the proceeds placed in the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, during this Congress I hope to ease my mind and have an hour, and possibly, if I could get a good start, an hour and a half [laughter]; but that is in the future. Oh, you say, we do not want to increase the debt—get the money by internal taxation. That is what the President said. Great heavens! Under Republican policies we paid substantially three billions of dollars of debt that was made to preserve the Union, and since that time we have paid five billions of dollars, under Republican policies, without borrowing to pay the pensions, and the expenses of the Government mounted up and doubled again and again, and you the first year you came into power increased appropriations so that the aggregate appropriated was greater than ever made to carry on the Government. As an American citizens, I stand to-day ready to do my duty. Oh, memory! Mr. Chairman, I had the honor of being the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when Mr. Reed was in the Speaker's chair at the beginning of the Spanish War. We made at that time a revenue bill. You would not vote for it. You offered a substitute, and the present honored Speaker of this House, if my recollection does not play me false, at that time said as to a man who has since crossed over—the gentleman from New York, Mr. Cummings, possibly applying it to four or five other Democrats—that he was a traitor to his party.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as I shall not be able to say what I desire in 10 minutes, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if I were a cartoonist I would draw two pictures which I think would adequately describe the predicament in which the Democratic Party finds itself on the revenue question. First, I would depict a happy home in the country, labeled "1912," with everything bright and cheerful, and the children jumping into the family wagon, on their way to school. I would have the young teacher, who had just arrived from the city, offer his services as driver, with a query floating up from the old farmer as to whether he knew how to drive, and a monosyllabic "Sure" emerging from the lips of the theoretical young man. In the second picture, labeled "1915," I would have the farmer and his friends rushing to the scene of a disaster along the roadside, where the horse, wagon, and children had all been dumped into the ditch. I would picture the young schoolmaster whistling on high ground. When the farmer and his friends come upon the scene inquiring as to the reason for the upset, I would have the young man ejaculate something about "the European war" [laughter on the Republican side], and if this did not appease the irate parent, I would have him answer in honeyed phrases, "It is only psychological, my dear man, and therefore easy of adjustment. If you and your friends will erect a derrick and apply a little of your valuable time to our new system of bookkeeping efficiency it will be perfectly easy for me to continue to guide the footsteps of your children in the pathway of knowledge." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, we all ought to sympathize keenly and deeply with our friends on the other side this afternoon. The eloquent speech of the brilliant leader of the Democratic majority, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], is worth treasuring in our memory for many years, because it went so thoroughly into details as to the reasons why the Democratic Party dumped our apple cart over in the roadside and as to why that party is now appealing to us to kindly erect a derrick to help it out.

I do not believe I have ever heard the gentleman more convincing, more zealous, or more earnest in the cause of the administration than he was this morning when he presented his resolution. [Laughter.]

And the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. How he did lambaste the Republicans for their indifference to this proposition! He intimated even that we were unresponsive and "mad." The gentleman from Tennessee seemed to think our tempers to-day were uncontrollable and that we were intensely unpatriotic. But the gentleman from Tennessee entirely overshot the mark.

There are some of us on this side of the House, most of us, I am confident, who are in a most delightful frame of mind to-day. We understand now exactly how deep is the hole into which the Democratic Party has sunk. They dug that hole for themselves, and we observe how anxious they are that we shall join them in helping to get them out of that hole. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Do the new Members of the House who have come in this session recall reading any of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORDS prior to 1912? If not, I commend to them some of the powerful utterances of gentlemen on the other side, who charged that all we said about prosperity under the protective tariff in the United States was moonshine.

Now when they have got control and have had a chance to put into effect their theories and policies there is a change over the surface of the moon. We can not help making note of it.

Do any of you Members who sat in the House and listened in former years to denunciations of Republican policies and prosperity—do any of you recall how unpatriotic then were those who stood for a protective tariff? Do you recall that the men who established industries were crooks and criminals? Do you remember how the trusts that were supposed to control the Government then were to be dethroned when the Democratic Party came into power? Do you recall the platform of the Baltimore convention and those fierce denunciations of the party in power? Do you remember how the appeal for economy welled up from the hearts of the people's champions on the other side, and how they were going to afford the people relief from the burdens of taxation "placed upon them by Republican prosperity," and how everything would be lovely and the goose would honk high when they came into power? Well, it is all over. [Applause.] It was all the result of a split in the Republican Party, enabling a minority party to slip into power.

Do you remember also how the distinguished gentleman [Mr. FITZGERALD] who ornaments the chair at the present time rose in his place as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and in one of his most eloquent speeches undertook from his own side to show the utter incompetency of the Democratic Party to manage anything, appealing in the name of high heaven, as it were, that those who were seeking loot from the Government, who were undertaking to obtain positions from the Government, should be held in check lest the Democratic Party should go down in disgrace? Well, it all comes back to us now. And the remarks, also, of the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who said that he did not care if the Republican Members did make capital of his utterances. Why, in the light of all these incidents, should Republicans go "mad" in contemplating the predicament of our Democratic friends?

And who does not recall the first message of the President of the United States when, following the lead that has not been followed since the days of Thomas Jefferson, he mounted the throne yonder, and told us that the industries of the United States were to be overthrown if there was anything in them in the nature of artificial protection? Do you recall how we were told that the manufacturers, those who employed labor in the United States, must "match their wits against the wits of the world"? How, in effect, they must go out and pay $3 a day for labor in the United States and compete with Germany, paying $1 a day, and other countries paying less? Do you recall how in the six months following that pronunciamento from "the throne" yonder the entire country felt the effects of Democratic rule, and how in six months the importations piled up in the customhouses and the revenues steadily decreased? Yes; the revenues went down as the imports increased; the mills in the United States stopped running, and our purchasing power went over to the foreigner. The foreigner, you remember, got our business; wages and profits made under a Republican administration were dispelled, and still there was no war.

Then, do you remember how they destroyed the trusts? I wish you would look over the lists they presented us and tell us whether they destroyed the Sugar Trust when they took the duty off, or promised to, proposing to pass into the pockets of the great importers more than $50,000,000 per annum that had formerly gone into the Treasury to the relief of the consumers of sugar in the United States. I wish, also, you would consider how they reduced the cost of living. Yesterday, from the rostrum there, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER], a sturdy young Democrat, received intense and thunderous applause when he told us how the cost of living had raised higher and higher during the period the Democrats had been in power. He evidently did not intend to——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, under leave to extend my remarks, I wish to quote briefly from a speech made by me on the war-tax question September 21, 1914, when the Underwood low-tariff law had been in effect for more than 11 months and when the European war had been under way for only about 7 weeks. The statement therein made is in full accord with the report of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee, which insists that the effect of the low-tariff law has been to decrease revenue and to increase imports, and that an extension of the war tax is inexcusable.

On September 14, prior to the passage of the original war-tax law, I said:

TERRIFIC LOSSES TO AMERICANS.

From January 1, 1914, to the end of July, 1914, the loss of revenue under the Underwood law, as compared with the Republican Payne law, was upward of $23,000,000. In the same seven months the damage done to the country by the same Democratic law was pointedly shown in relation to articles manufactured for consumption and crude materials entering into their manufacture. Nothing could better illustrate the effect of a low tariff upon American labor, perhaps, than these particular statistics. Of manufactured articles made by foreign labor and sent over to the United States ready for consumption, there was a gain in imports under the Democratic law of more than $39,000,000. In imports of materials for further use in manufacturing such as workmen might have made in the United States there was a decrease of approximately $27,000,000. In other words, the low tariff in these respects gave the work to the foreigner and took it away from the workmen in the United States. Carrying the illustration further, it developed that the balance of export trade in our favor under the Payne law in 1913 was $308,000,000, while under the Democratic law in 1914 it was $60,000,000, or a falling off of more than $248,000,000. While we were buying from the foreigner and giving him additional work to do for us we were selling him less of our goods and depriving ourselves of work that American workmen would have enjoyed, and all this in the very few months the Democratic law was on trial.

Figures like these do not sustain the Democratic contention that the war in Europe is the basic cause of the disarrangement of our Government finances. Nor do they entertain this view who have experienced the disturbance of business and the loss of labor from month to month as the Democratic tariff proceeded along its deadly course.

DOES NOT LOOK LIKE A WAR BURDEN.

The accident of the war does not explain the continued increase of imports in certain of our ports, for the month of August during the war, nor the continued decrease of exports upon which under Republican conditions we would now be deriving a return of foreign gold.

Figures quoted by the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, indicate that the imports at that port in August were practically "the same in value as in the corresponding month last year, and that the duties collected decreased $959,000; also that while Boston imports increased $3,700,000 in August the duties collected decreased $682,000. Here is a falling off in revenue of $1,641,000 in two cities notwithstanding an increase in imports. The business done at the customhouse in New York gives only slight justification to the claim that the total August decrease of $10,000,000 in revenues is due to the war, for the value of imports fell off $15,000,000 and the amount of duty collected decreased $7,000,000. But the average rate of duty in New York in August last year was 25 per cent and this year it was 19.8 per cent. If the same rate of duty had been collected this year as last the decrease would have been less than $4,000,000 instead of $7,000,000, and if the same rate of duties had been collected in Philadelphia and in Boston the decrease in revenues at the customhouses in these three cities would have been only $3,800,000 instead of $8,641,000.

"Nearly $5,000,000 of the decrease in revenues at the three ports is traceable directly to the changes made in the tariff by the Underwood law. The present Congress is responsible for this deficit and the country will be persuaded of that fact before the congressional campaign is many weeks older."

THE DEMOCRATIC LAW IN OPERATION.

Figures showing duties collected from customs, with increases and decreases under the Payne and Underwood laws, respectively, as I have been able to get them from the Department of Commerce, are as follows:

WE ARE NOT MAD.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, deficiencies were inevitable under the low-tariff law, apart from the fearful consequences to labor and business which our friends upon the other side are now prone to forget, because the European war has given them an excuse to talk about prosperity.

Why should we be "mad," as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] has indicated, when the whole Republican case has been proven, and when even the President of the United States in his proper person has been obliged to admit the Democratic financial delinquency to the Members of Congress? Gentlemen upon the other side persist in saying that the European war is responsible for their dilemma. With equal facility they point to the European war as the cause of the prosperity which they contend the country now enjoys. For one I do not like to forget the stress that was laid upon the "iniquity" of protection during the campaign of 1912. The Democratic platform of Baltimore was filled with denunciation of this wholesome Republican policy, and during his campaign the President stood upon that platform, contending that it was not "molasses to catch flies."

DENOUNCING THE TARIFF SYSTEM.

The President talked then as the Democratic leaders generally talked. They were all against the Republican doctrine. As they saw it, and as they made others believe, protection was the "breeder of trusts"; it was the cruel agency of monopoly; it was the handmaiden of the capitalistic class. A glossary of the hideous adjectives applied to the protective system in the campaign of 1912 would fill a book, and the President did not go back on this plank of the platform in his first message to Congress. He said we should not protect those things that were artificial, but should get "back to nature." We should "whet our wits against the wits of the world." There was no war cloud visible in the European sky when this declaration was made, so that the President and his followers had a free foot to work out their theory and to abide by the result. It is only recalling history to observe that the first six months of the new system were months of uncertainty, unemployment, and business loss. That the new law would produce sufficient revenue to run the Government on "the tariff for revenue" basis was soon disproven.

THE WILD HORSES UNRESTRAINED.

That the Democratic Party could or would practice economy was not to be tolerated. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating of it," and having the pudding, the hungry wild horses of Democracy were not to be kept from the trough. Witness the eloquent utterances of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] a member of the Appropriations Committee of the Democratic Congress now in complete control of the revenues of the Nation. In the second session of the Sixty-third Congress, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 178, Mr. SISSON said:

You all recall that some years ago, within the recollection of every man on the floor of this House, the newspapers headlined a billion-dollar Congress, and it was like a fire bell at night. Mr. Reed was Speaker, and we were spending a billion dollars in one Congress, or $500,000,000 a year. You Republicans will remember how the charges were rung then over all the country against you. You will remember Mr. Reed's laconic reply, to the effect that we had a billion-dollar Government. That was the only answer that could be made to the proposition. Now the Democrats are in power, and I am afraid, gentlemen of the House, that we will expend more money this year than has ever been expended in the history of this Government before in any one year. Perhaps it may be necessary and the people may be demanding it, but if that is true, we have wrongfully criticized the Republican Party, and we ought to apologize to them for charging them with spending money and being criminally extravagant in the administration of the affairs of this Government.

EXTRAVAGANCE RUNNING RAMPANT.

Later on, April 3, 1914, struggling to stem the tide of extravagance in which the Democratic Congress was indulging, Mr. SISSON again dared to speak the truth.

Principle—

He said—

has gone to the four winds of the earth, and we are writing ourselves down in the history of the country as being the most outrageously and most criminally extravagant Congress that ever sat on the American Continent * * *. I said that in a speech before, in the last session, and when I made that speech Members of the Democratic House came to me and asked me not to put it into the RECORD, because it would be used by the Republicans in their campaign book. Let them use it. * * * You may use the statement now, gentlemen, because when Democrats get to be so violently extravagant that it makes its own record look bad as compared to the very marked record of the Republicans, I must apologize to you Republicans for having ever used the words "criminally extravagant" in criticizing the appropriations that you made, for if that expression "criminally extravagant" was proper to apply to you, my God! the English language has never found an adjective strong enough to apply to Democratic extravagance.

EASIER TO SPEND THAN EARN.

But the gentleman from Mississippi was not the only Member upon the other side of the House who gave conscientious expression to his innermost thoughts. We have another witness, than whom no other more expert in the finances of the Government can be summoned. It was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations himself, the distinguished Representative from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. Not once but often did the chairman of the Appropriations Committee sound warnings of the rocks ahead of the administration. Coming from a great community, which is often the subject of criticism because of the bigness of its commercial and financial transactions, the gentleman from New York knew the difference between raising funds for the maintenance of the Government and the spending of them. He knew from practical experience that while it is easy to spend money it is not so easy to earn it. And so by reason of the exactions of those sections of the country which are ever ready to spend more money than they contribute to the common fund, we find him saying (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 3d sess., 62d Cong., Feb. 11, 1913):

THE CHAIRMAN'S ADMONITION.

I believe that there is in the contingent fund of the House to-day, or there was about a week ago, $100, and there are requests pending for $100,000 to supply the deficiencies for the balance of this fiscal year.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has not overexaggerated the picture as to what is likely to happen at this session of Congress. No one can tell just how much the appropriations at this session will be, but I think it is a conservative estimate to say, Mr. Speaker, that they will far exceed the appropriations that have been made at any session in the history of the Government.

I have done my part and have done my best in some way to curtail the expenditures; not to interfere with the legitimate functions and services of the Government, but to stop the expenditure of public moneys to gratify every whim and to please every fancy, either of individuals or of Members. Everyone seems possessed, however, of a determination to obtain moneys to maintain and extend that particular branch of the public service in which he or his constituents is particularly interested and then to make fragmentary, spasmodic efforts to save in some other direction in which neither he nor his constituents will be affected.

Such a condition can not long continue. I understand that the bills reported at this session of Congress will probably provide for the expenditure of the $100,000,000 which it is anticipated will be raised by an income tax. It reminds me somewhat of an incident that occurred in the Committee on Appropriations when $27,000 was requested for a certain public service in anticipation of the enactment of some legislation at the next session of Congress.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that unless this side of the House wakes up to a sense of its responsibility, not only will the appropriations be grossly extravagant, but they will amount to so much that talk of a revision downward of the tariff will be the most hollow mockery.

LAVISH IN PROMISE; SCANT ON PERFORMANCE.

Prior to all this the Democratic Party, at Baltimore, in its platform of 1912, after denouncing the Republican tariff and charging to it responsibility for the high cost of living, made this deliberate but now seemingly ridiculous pronouncement to a credulous world:

We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

Lavish in promise, but scant on performance. "The profligate waste" which the Democrats were going to correct was made to exceed anything that has ever occurred in the way of extravagance in the history of the Nation. That part of the Baltimore platform which promised to check waste was as sticky as molasses only, in that it did fool many of the people.

And as to the charge that "recent Republican Congresses" "have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil," we have these deplorable evidences of the saccharine quality of the Baltimore platform. Taxes were not reduced; they were increased. The loss of tariff revenue obliged the party to impose an income tax, which is likely to grow more burdensome, and a war tax of $100,000,000 in time of peace. All this the people are directly bound to pay.

A MEDLEY OF BROKEN PROMISES.

The extension of this unnecessary and burdensome war tax, as contemplated by the existing resolution, is a confession of Democratic inadequacy to the task of raising revenue to run the Government. The sugary provision about "the purchasing power of the people's toil" was almost a sacrilege in view of the unemployment and distress that prevailed immediately after the Democratic Party came into power. As for "simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government," inquiring minds are referred to the luminous remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from New York. There has been no "simplicity," nor has there been any "economy" under the new régime. "A reduction in the number of useless offices" was a promise which has been responded to by a constantly increasing demand to provide for "deserving Democrats" in continental United States, throughout our colonial possessions, and wherever the ramifications of our diplomatic and consular services extend.

"Simplicity and economy" are terms which, carried to the immortal Jefferson in the silent shade of Monticello, would cause him to turn in his grave.

A QUESTION OF MONEY; THAT IS ALL.

And the administration does not deny it. Leading Democrats do not deny it. Thinking men, like former Gov. Colquitt, of Texas, assert it. The able Secretary of the Treasury, who shaped up our Federal reserve act for the distribution of public funds to the four corners of the earth, and who devised the ship-purchase bill to still further increase the volume of Democratic expenditures, has given us statements from day to day which attempt to convince Congress that we are still in funds, while his official reports indicate that we are steadily falling behind not only in revenue collections through the customhouses but in internal revenue collected from liquors and tobacco. And it is noteworthy that liquor and tobacco are in the nature of luxuries that have borne heavily of our taxes, and if rumor be true are to serve further as burden bearers in that capacity.

In the closing pages of his report the Secretary of the Treasury of an administration that was to conduct the Government on a tariff-for-revenue basis, that was to destroy the Republican tariff, dissolve the trusts, reduce the cost of living, and practice economy, tells us in the mildest possible language that it will be necessary to raise at least $112,000,000 for the fiscal year 1917 over and above all that we are now raising, plus the customs revenue, plus the internal revenue, plus the income and corporation taxes, and plus the burdensome war tax.

BACK TO THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF.

It is evident—

Says the Secretary—

that the emergency revenue measure and the existing duty on raw sugars can be continued with advantage.

Horrors! Are we to accept the Republican doctrine on sugars for the protection of the planters of Louisiana and of the Hawaiian Islands. "If we are so soon to be done for," we tariff-for-revenue Democrats, "what were we ever begun for?"

This being done—

Continues the Secretary—

we now have to consider the new forms of taxation which must be resorted to for the purpose of providing the additional revenues required, the major part of which is needed to carry out the enlarged program for national defense. The total amount so required for the year 1917 is $112,806,394.22.

SOME MORE THINGS TO TAX.

The Secretary does not like the idea of issuing Panama Canal bonds, but he thinks additional funds to save the Nation's credit "can easily be raised by internal taxation without appreciable burdens upon the American people."

Then suggesting that more money may be obtained by extending the income tax and by imposing a tax on "such products as gasoline, crude and refined oils, horsepower of automobiles and other internal-combustion engines, and various other things."

He will "be glad to place at the disposal of the Congress all information in the possession of the department which may be useful to the Congress" to put this program over on the people.

Here is the pleasant job that the Democratic administration is putting up to a Democratic Congress, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] may be assured that the Republican Members are not so "mad" about it as are some of their brethren upon the Democratic side. The hole was not dug by Republicans. It was the inevitable consequence of the sugar-coated platform which the Baltimore convention passed along to the voters of the country, who occasionally have a sweet tooth.

THE PRESIDENT STANDS BY.

But to the credit of the President of the United States be it said that he stands by his Secretary of the Treasury. In his address to both branches of Congress December 7, 1915, the President told us of the influence of the European war upon our revenues. Prosperity was returning, but the revenues were shy. When the President disposed of the other questions confronting the Nation and took up for discussion the condition of the Treasury he said:

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On the 30th of June last there was an available balance in the general fund of the Treasury of $104,170,105.78. The total estimated receipts for the year 1916, on the assumption that the emergency revenue measure passed by the last Congress will not be extended beyond its present limit, the 31st of December, 1915, and that the present duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar will be discontinued after the 1st of May, 1916, will be $670,365,500. The balance of June last and these estimated revenues come, therefore, to a grand total of $774,535,605.78. The total estimated disbursements for the present fiscal year, including $25,000,000 for the Panama Canal, $12,000,000 for probable deficiency appropriations, and $50,000 for miscellaneous debt redemptions, will be $753,891,000; and the balance in the general fund of the Treasury will be reduced to $20,644,605.78. The emergency revenue act, if continued beyond its present time limitation, would produce, during the half year then remaining, about $41,000,000. The duty of 1 cent per pound on sugar, if continued, would produce during the two months of the fiscal year remaining after the 1st of May, about $15,000,000. These two sums, amounting together to $56,000,000, if added to the revenues of the second half of the fiscal year, would yield the Treasury at the end of the year an available balance of $76,644,605.78.

FINANCES FOR 1917.

The additional revenues required to carry out the program of military and naval preparation of which I have spoken would, as at present estimated, be for the fiscal year 1917, $93,800,000. Those figures, taken with the figures for the present fiscal year, which I have already given, disclose our financial problem for the year 1917. Assuming that the taxes imposed by the emergency-revenue act and the present duty on sugar are to be discontinued, and that the balance at the close of the present fiscal year will be only $20,644,605.78, that the disbursements for the Panama Canal will again be about $25,000,000, and that the additional expenditures for the Army and Navy are authorized by the Congress, the deficit in the general fund of the Treasury on the 30th of June, 1917, will be nearly $235,000,000. To this sum at least $50,000,000 should be added to represent a safe working balance for the Treasury, and $12,000,000 to include the usual deficiency estimates in 1917; and these additions would make a total deficit of some $297,000,000. If the present taxes should be continued throughout this year and the next, however, there would be a balance in the Treasury of some $76,500,000 at the end of the present fiscal year, and a deficit at the end of the next year of only some $50,000,000, or, reckoning in $62,000,000 for deficiency appropriations and a safe Treasury balance at the end of the year, a total deficit of some $112,000,000. The obvious moral of the figures is that it is a plain counsel of prudence to continue all of the present taxes or their equivalents, and confine ourselves to the problem of providing $112,000,000 of new revenue rather than $297,000,000.

SOURCES OF EXTRA REVENUE.

How shall we obtain the new revenues? We are frequently reminded that there are many millions of bonds which the Treasury is authorized under existing law to sell to reimburse the sums paid out of current revenues for the construction of the Panama Canal; and it is true that bonds to the amount of approximately $222,000,000 are now available for that purpose. Prior to 1913 $134,631,980 of these bonds had actually been sold to recoup the expenditures at the Isthmus and now constitute a considerable item of the public debt. But I for one do not believe that the people of this country approve of postponing the payment of their bills. Borrowing money is short-sighted finance. It can be justified only when permanent things are to be accomplished which many generations will certainly benefit by and which it seems hardly fair that a single generation should pay for. The objects we are now proposing to spend money for can not be so classified, except in the sense that everything wisely done may be said to be done in the interest of posterity as well as in our own. It seems to me a clear dictate of prudent statesmanship and frank finance that in what we are now, I hope, about to undertake we should pay as we go. The people of the country are entitled to know just what burdens of taxation they are to carry, and to know from the outset, now. The new bills should be paid by internal taxation.

EXTEND INCOME TAX.

To what sources, then, shall we turn? This is so peculiarly a question which the gentlemen of the House of Representatives are expected under the Constitution to propose an answer to that you will hardly expect me to do more than discuss it in very general terms. We should be following an almost universal example of modern governments if we were to draw the greater part or even the whole of the revenues we need from the income taxes. By somewhat lowering the present limits of exemption and the figure at which the surtax shall begin to be imposed, and by increasing, step by step throughout the present graduation, the surtax itself, the income taxes as at present apportioned would yield sums sufficient to balance the books of the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year 1917 without anywhere making the burden unreasonably or oppressively heavy. The precise reckonings are fully and accurately set out in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which will be immediately laid before you.

And there are many additional sources of revenue which can justly be resorted to without hampering the industries of the country or putting any too great charge upon individual expenditure. A tax of 1 cent per gallon on gasoline and naphtha would yield, at the present estimated production, $10,000,000; a tax of 50 cents per horsepower on automobiles and internal explosion engines, $15,000,000; a stamp tax on bank checks, probably $18,000,000; a tax of 25 cents per ton on pig iron, $10,000,000; a tax of 25 cents per ton on fabricated iron and steel, probably $10,000,000. In a country of great industries like this it ought to be easy to distribute the burdens of taxation without making them anywhere bear too heavily or too exclusively upon any one set of persons or undertakings. What is clear is that the industry of this generation should pay the bills of this generation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, we are no longer in doubt as to the situation. It is no longer a question of the iniquitous tariff or of grinding trusts and corporations, of increased cost of living, or of Republican extravagance—the one sole and absorbing problem of the administration is deficiency, a Democratic deficiency in the place of a Republican surplus, a deficiency that must continue to grow, with increasing taxes and burdens upon the people, through no fault of the Republican Party, but in spite of all its admonitions and warnings. The Democratic platform at Baltimore may not have been a platform with which to "catch flies," but it was sufficient to prove the utter inefficiency of the pet Democratic theories. Look at it as we may, the cold, hard facts stare us in the face. The Government is in financial distress, the people are unduly burdened now, and unless and until a just and equitable protective-tariff system is restored no remedy is in sight.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I read a squib in a newspaper the other day to this effect: An Italian appeared before a court to make application for naturalization papers, and in the course of the examination the judge inquired of him if he belonged to any society that was inimical to the interests of the United States, and he said that he was a Democrat. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And I think that no society that could be organized anywhere within the boundaries of the United States could have done more harm to the American people than the Democrats have done since the inauguration of President Wilson to the Presidency.

They have opened the ports of America to the markets of the world. They have closed the factories and the workshops and thrown all the American workmen out of employment. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] They have taxed them beyond every hope and reason, and to-day we pay every kind of a tax under the sun.

They came into power on the promise of an economical expenditure of the public money. They have been most recklessly extravagant in that respect of any party that ever existed. During the last Congress they spent $166,000,000 more than the greatest expenditure during any Republican Congress in the history of America. If you had kept yourselves within reasonable bounds of expenditure, you would not be called upon to tax the people under this iniquitous law that is before us to-day. If by any chance some frugal man during prosperous times in this country was able to accumulate money enough to buy a home, and he bought it at any time since the enactment of this law, he would find himself compelled to pay into the Treasury of the United States 50 cents on every $500 of the purchase price. And if by some unfortunate chance he was thrown out of employment since the Democratic Party came into power and he had a little home which he had been able to buy before that, but was obliged because of his idleness to put a mortgage on it, he would feel himself obliged to pay 50 cents on every $500 of the mortgage as a result of this law.

The people throughout the land everywhere are protesting against the iniquity of this law. They do not want it renewed. It ought not to be. It ought never to have been enacted. It was enacted at the request of the President of the United States, in the name of war in days of peace. It was enacted because of the necessity for funds. It was enacted because of the reckless extravagance of your administration and your utter disregard of the necessities of the American people. And I want, as one citizen of America, to file my protest against the reenactment of this law. We are patriotic. No man can wrest away the patriotism of the men on this side of the House, and, least of all, can it be done by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. We resent the imputation of unpatriotic action on this side. We speak for the best thought of the American people. We speak in the name of economy, of decency, of good government, of honest expenditure of the public money, and we protest against the reckless extravagance of the Democratic Party and against the reenactment of this iniquitous law. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have a number of nonpartisan and important letters protesting against the extension for another year of this so-called war tax, one, in particular, a protest against the continuation of the stamp tax on conveyances in connection with mortgages which have become necessary in western Washington largely on account of the workings of the Underwood Tariff Act. Another man writes a protest against the unjust discrimination of this act against jobbers and wholesalers in fruits, vegetables, and other farm products, which, roughly speaking, is five to ten times as much as the corporation income tax.

This letter says:

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, Member of Congress.

DEAR SIR: Press dispatches indicate that the present administration will endeavor to have the so-called war tax, which expires by limitation December 31, reenacted for an indefinite period.

We desire to call your attention to the unjust discrimination of this act to jobbers and wholesalers of fruits, vegetables, and other farm products. The tax is so burdensome that it makes it class legislation as applied to these lines of business. Roughly speaking, it is from five to ten times as much as the corporation income tax. Some of the signers of this letter are paying $50 and upward per month under this stamp tax. This is equal to ten times a 1 per cent tax on a net profit of $5,000 per year, or 5 per cent on a net profit of $10,000.

We are taxed under the income-tax law on our net profits; we are further taxed under the corporation-tax law on our net profits; and now we are unduly taxed under the stamp act of the so-called war tax.

We hope you will use all the force at your command to secure such amendments to the so-called war tax as will relieve us of some of this triple burden.

It seems to us there should be a limit somewhere to the continual taxation of brains and industry.

Yours, very respectfully,

E. S. GILL, Secretary.

Not only does this war-tax extension which is being shoved over to-day continue a tax which catches the small shipments of produce, but it is actually proposed, when the act is revamped after the holiday, to increase that tax to 3 cents from 1 cent. I have a letter from W. H. Paulhamus, president of the Puyallup and Sumner Fruit Growers' Association, as follows:

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON, Member of Congress.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Permit me to call your attention to the fact that Congress will undoubtedly be taking up the matter of obtaining revenue to cover Government expenses, and it is my understanding that an effort will be made to increase the revenue stamps of 1 cent now required on bills of lading to 3 cents. This will be an extreme hardship on jobbers, wholesalers, grocers, brokers, and manufacturers in this State, who are very extensive users of bills of lading, and to increase the Government revenue 200 per cent will be rather heavy. I trust that we will have your assistance in giving this matter serious consideration.

With kind personal regards,

W. H. PAULHAMUS, President.

I am glad of the opportunity to present these, even if given very brief time, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The man who complains about the excess of stamps on conveyances, which have resulted from shingle mill, lumber mill, and other failures, also complains of the tax on other legal papers which have been necessary by the hardships the low tariff act of Mr. UNDERWOOD have imposed upon our great Northwest. He concludes his letter with the sentence:

It may be necessary that the stamp tax be reenacted to prevent a national deficit but the burdens of the present administration are certainly a sufficient handicap on business up to date.

He says further:

The issuance of stock certificates under the laws of this State does not represent any business done whatever. It merely represents the change of the property owned by persons into corporation form, and is not in any sense a tax on business because no business is done. If it were a tax on the sales of stock in which money was received it would be far less objectionable because some benefit would be received. But, as you know, under the laws of this State, the stock is issued usually in consideration of the turning over of the business or the plant which is thus given corporate form merely, or the stock is issued to the persons who subscribe out of the payment of any money or the turning over of the property, and does not in any sense represent any business actually done. Namely, to illustrate:

In Mr. Hyde's case he turns over his patents to the corporation in order to do business as a corporation. No real sale is made; the value is largely speculative and is the amount of business energy that is put into the business in the future that will make it succeed. The tax on the stock to be issued for the patent, merely makes a wet blanket on the business and on his ability to make the stock of value.

Mr. Chairman, I am told that a lively exchange of words occurred in the Democratic caucus Monday night when the vote to extend this "war" tax was sewed up. One Democrat wanted to know why there was necessity for it. The southern Democrat who was leading the fight for it said that it was a long story—too long to be explained. The inquiring western Democrat insisted on knowing why the "war" tax had to be renewed. "Well, I'll tell you," was the reply. "Mr. UNDERWOOD and his Democratic colleagues on the committee wrote a tariff measure which they thought would raise enough revenue to keep the country going. Mr. UNDERWOOD took their bill to President Wilson. The latter objected. Mr. UNDERWOOD wrote another bill and took it to the White House. That was turned down. Then the President wróte his own ideas into the bill, and the deficit is the result."

That, Mr. Chairman, is one explanation for this ill-considered and ill-balanced measure, which is about to be extended for a year, and which before the year is up will be, so the President has said, made stiffer; or, in other words, more odious and more oppressive.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, it has always been a mystery to me why the Democratic Party prefers to tax the American people when they want to raise revenue to putting a tax on importations that came into the United States. That mystery has not been solved. There is an opportunity here to-day to impose taxes on importations that would raise revenues to the amount of $77,000,000 if you simply taxed the importations that are coming in now, as they were taxed under the act of 1909. But you prefer to tax the people of the United States. The man who borrows must pay a tax upon the note he gives. You tax telephone and telegraph messages. You tax everybody in the United States rather than tax the foreigner for the privilege of selling in this market. [Applause on the Republican side.] You are proposing to plaster the people of the United States all over with stamp taxes.

I promised many men in my district, and some of them Democrats, that I would vote at the earliest opportunity to get rid of these stamp taxes, and venture that more than the two Democrats who have admitted it publicly in Washington made the same promise to their constituents.

What are you Democrats going to do to-day? Vote to continue these stamp taxes, contrary to the expectations of your constituents, omitting the opportunity of imposing taxes on foreign producers who are selling in the American market to-day? Goods were sold to the amount of $56,000,000 more in eight months of 1915 than in a corresponding eight months' period in 1913 under the Payne law. Your revenues have not fallen off because of a falling off of importations, but because of your reduction in the tax imposed upon foreigners for the privilege of selling in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.] But you are just beginning to impose special taxes. If you raise all the money asked to be appropriated by the President in his annual address a few days ago, there will not be room on the American people for stamp taxes. They will be so thoroughly plastered over that you will have to put one stamp on top of another. You backed up on putting sugar on the free list. Why do you not back up on wool? Why do you not back up on corn, on wheat, on cattle, horses, hogs? Why do you not back up on a dozen other things that are produced by the American people? Why do you not back up on hay, on eggs, on butter, on cheese? You can raise revenue in abundance if you will without imposing taxes on industry, taxes on the people who have to borrow money, taxes on the people every time they turn around. This is not a war tax, because our country is not at war. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SHERLEY). The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all agreed, so long as we have extravagant appropriations made by a Democratic Congress, that we shall need to raise additional revenue over that now provided for by law. We differ as to the means of raising the revenue. The Democrats are in a majority in the House and in the Senate, and have the Presidency. They believe in raising revenue by applying internal taxes against the people rather than in imposing additional duties upon imports from abroad, which additional duties might in some way give protection to American industries. They have the right to their belief. They have the power to enact it into law.

They passed the present law, which expires on the 31st of this month, somewhat in haste, obtaining votes on the Democratic side of the House by the plea that it was only for a short time, and that while it might contain inconsistencies, while it might contain oppressive features, they would not last long; and having obtained votes on that side of the House by that method, what is now proposed? Well, there is more than one way of skinning a cat. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Instead of coming into the House and proposing to extend even this bad law until it could be revised, they propose to extend it over the next presidential election, and then, if they should by accident be successful, they would make it permanent. If we should win they would be glad to leave a deficit in the Treasury.

Why do you not revise the law? Gentlemen on that side of the House have told constituent after constituent that they never would vote to retain certain unjust features in that law. It is oppressive, unfairly oppressive, upon certain industries of the country. It has ruined more than one manufacturer in the country. It is unfair in many of its provisions, and you would not dare as a new proposition to reenact it as it stands. But, unwilling to be courageous, you propose to do that indirectly which you are not willing to do directly. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I leave it to you to answer to your constituents. There is a large number of people in the United States unjustly and unfairly oppressed by many of the provisions of this act who will remember what you do. The original act did not take effect until after the congressional elections of 1914. You extend this for one year. It will be the last time for many years when you will have any power whatever over any revenue proposition. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You have the responsibility, and those of you who have promised your constituents never to vote for the oppressive features of this law can answer to your constituents. We will call it to their attention. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in the good old days—in the good old Republican days—Uncle Sam, proud, dignified, prosperous, sat in the place of customs and from the goods and wares offered there in competition with the labor and industry of our country collected goodly sums without burden to our people, which met abundantly the public needs. But to-day Uncle Sam, worried, abashed, apologetic, stands hat in hand, begging pennies at the telephone booths [laughter on the Republican side], levying tribute on little children and sweet girl graduates in the tax on gum. [Laughter.]

Even the chastened joy with which we pay our debts by giving a new note is chilled and dampened by the shadow of the clutching fingers of the Treasury taking its toll of our hard-earned promises to pay. [Laughter.] Whether we buy or sell or borrow, the Democratic administration stands at our shoulders, a beggar of picayunes, while sleek, fat, well-fed publicans in the form of Democratic tax gatherers take a large toll from the dimes and pennies wrung from a burdened people ere they fling the limited remainder into the yawning vaults of an empty Treasury. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] called on you to perform what he was pleased to call a patriotic and unpopular duty. If he will move to strike out the word "patriotic," I will guarantee him a unanimous agreement to his proposition swelling from the Atlantic to the Pacific. [Applause on the Republican side.]

If this legislation were the only means for the rehabilitation of a bankrupt Treasury, we would join you in passing it; but you all know it is not. You all know that instead of thus burdening our people and leaving the foreigner to bring here his wares untaxed while our factories and mills remain idle, all the funds necessary could be obtained by a slight increase of even a few tariff schedules. Your Treasury deficit is not due to decreased imports, but to reduced duties on the goods we do import. A reasonable duty on wool and the old duty on sugar would alone, on the basis of our imports under the Underwood bill, have brought more into the Treasury than all the receipts from the war-revenue tax.

What we should do is to protect our labor and tax the foreign importer rather than burden labor with taxes and give the foreigner our market untaxed.

If our Democratic friends learned anything by experience or heeded the rising tide of popular dissatisfaction this tax, as unnecessary as it is unpopular, would give way to a measure providing for revenue and protection at the customhouses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, if I am correct, I have three minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] should speak so unkindly to me. He said that my statements were saturated with unkindness and ignorance. When I speak truthfully but unkindly to my wife, that is exactly the way she answers me. [Laughter.] However, later on she comes back and apologizes, just as this gentleman will do.

I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] and the gentlemen on that side of the House that so far as the measure that is being discussed here to-day, the interest in this bill and other matters pertaining to the tariff are concerned, which the President says will be the only thing we will have to talk about, we will meet you in this Congress, on the floor of this House, and on the platform throughout the country in the coming campaign, and you will fly before us as grasshoppers will squirm and fly before a road roller. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I know what I am talking about when I say that if the manner of bookkeeping practiced in the Treasury statement were to be practiced by a national bank in this country, to show a net balance of money in the bank, a portion of which is there to take care of drafts issued prior to that date, the bank examiner would put every man connected with that kind of bookkeeping in that bank in jail. That is the statement I made, and I have nothing to retract in it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, in doing my duty to my district and to the country I shall record my vote against this measure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Mr. KITCHIN rose and was recognized for one hour, amid applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised and I am sure no intelligent man is surprised to see the Republicans in the House to a man oppose this measure. Every dollar collected from the people under this act goes directly from the people into the Federal Treasury and not a dollar goes into the pockets of any favorite of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the last 14 years since I have been a member of this House it has been my observation that nothing makes a Republican so mad as when an honest dollar collected from the people goes, where it properly belongs, into the Treasury for the benefit of the Government and of all the people, and nothing makes a Republican so happy as when a dollar collected from the people through a protective tariff goes, not into the Treasury, where it honestly belongs, but into the pockets of the tariff-fattened favorites of the Republican Party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Of course they are against this bill. My friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] says that if any national banker kept his books as the Secretary of the Treasury keeps his as to the financial condition of the Treasury he would be put into the penitentiary. What is the offense of the Secretary of the Treasury? It is that he puts down every single item of receipts and disbursements, so that every man, woman, and child in this broad land can understand it. In other words, he puts down the truth with candor and clearness, and they want to penalize the Secretary of the Treasury for his candor and his truth. I want to say to my distinguished friend that if it was a penitentiary offense to make—I will not say a deliberately false statement—an absolutely false statement on this floor in regard to the Democratic tariff and the so-called Democratic extravagance not a Republican who has spoken here to-day could be kept out of the penitentiary, if properly prosecuted. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

I am sorry that the Republicans are so sensitive as to take offense at the words of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. Of course he said you are not patriots. Now, between us, whoever said you were patriots except yourselves? [Laughter on the Democratic side.] I think you are patriots from your standpoint. Patriotism is love for and loyalty to one's country. The real difference between you and the gentleman from Tennessee is the meaning of "country." You think just a few little manufacturers in New England and Pennsylvania constitute the whole country, while the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] thinks that the whole United States, with its hundred million people, constitute the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You are loyal and loving and devoted and submissive to that which you think is the country, and so is the gentleman from Tennessee loyal and devoted to what he believes to be the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It has been charged in this debate by several Members on that side, and they were but repeating the charges made daily for the last two years by the Republican press throughout the country, that the present administration and the last Democratic Congress were recklessly extravagant; that the Underwood Act was a failure as a revenue producer; that it, together with Democratic extravagance, had caused large deficits in the Treasury; that it had greatly reduced the amount of the general surplus fund; that it had drained the Treasury of its gold. I here and now challenge the truth of every one of these charges and propose to show their absolute falsity in every particular. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not pretend to say that the Republicans deliberately make misstatements and misrepresentations on the floor of the House in respect to Democratic legislation, the Democratic tariff, and the so-called Democratic extravagance. But I do say this, that if they are not deliberate and willful you are the most ignorant set of men that ever got together in this world. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Let me here give you a little illustration of that ignorance. There is not a better or more patriotic or more faithful Representative in this House than my friend from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], and in his charges against us he is perfectly sincere as he is perfectly ignorant. In his speech a few moments ago he denounced the stamp tax on the poor man's mortgage, which he declared the Democrats put on in the emergency act. He read a petition from his constituents protesting indignantly against the continuation of such a stamp tax on mortgages. The truth is, my friend, that the emergency act expressly exempts mortgages from the stamp tax, and so there is no stamp tax on mortgages. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let me read to you the act:

Provided, That nothing contained in this paragraph shall be so construed as to impose a tax upon any instrument given to secure a debt, etc.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. For a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I desire information only. Is a tax placed on notes that accompany mortgages?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; on notes that accompany mortgages and on those that do not accompany mortgages.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, well, what is the difference? Your tariff act and your stamp act have placed great burdens on the far Northwest. We have had collapses of business, many failures, and we are trying to bring the business back, but we find ourselves confronted with a promise of more so-called war taxes. [Applause on the Republican side.] Our people out there are not deceived, and will stand it only until they can make a change.

Mr. KITCHIN. And you can not bring business back because of the stamp tax on mortgages which does not exist. I want my friend from Washington to tell his petitioners that there is no tax on mortgages. I want him to let them know another truth. Let them know that the Republican act of 1898 taxed notes and taxed mortgages, while the Democratic act exempts mortgages. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. But we repealed it. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; after nearly three years.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; for a question; but make it short and easy, because I have but an hour.

Mr. KREIDER. The tax on notes is 2 cents for every $100, is it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; we followed the old Republican stamp act in respect to notes.

Mr. KREIDER. What is the tax on a $500 debt secured by mortgage?

Mr. KITCHIN. Ten cents on the note, whether secured by mortgage or not; but nothing on the mortgage. Having answered the gentleman's question, I wish to proceed.

Gentlemen have charged Wilson's administration and the Democratic Congress with being extravagant. Four Republican speakers, including the leader of the minority, said that the reason that we have deficits in the Treasury is because of the reckless extravagance of the Democratic Party since it has been in power, and the new Republican Members loudly applauded every statement. The old Republican Members remained silent, because they knew how absolutely false it was; that there was not a word of truth in it. Let me make to you new Republican Members a little friendly suggestion, which may be of profit to you. If you are going to applaud every time you hear an untruth or a misrepresentation from an old-time Republican on this floor, you are going to wear out your hands or else you will have to get you some hand pads. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. We expect to wear out our hands on this side of the House with applause because here is where the enthusiasm is. There is not much enthusiasm over there.

Mr. KITCHIN. What I want you to do is to say something that will make these old Republicans applaud and bruise up their hands a little and not impose all the burden on the new Members. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. This side of the House has never acquired the habit of relying upon untruths to gain applause. That pertains to the other side.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to show that there is not one word of truth in the charge of Democratic extravagance. I do not believe that a Republican would get up in the House and willfully and knowingly make a false statement. While you gentlemen state on this floor many palpable untruths, I do not attribute it so much to design as I do to the force of habit on your part. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, as to the charge of extravagance. The fact is that, exclusive of the Post Office appropriation—and this is always excluded, because, when we appropriate for the Post Office Department, it comes back in post-office receipts—the Wilson administration and Democratic Congress appropriated for its first year $17,258,000 less than the last year of the Taft administration and for the last year—this fiscal year—over $10,000,000 less.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Who had control of the House the last year of the Taft administration?

Mr. KITCHIN. We had control of the House, we have control of it now, and we will have control of it in the next Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I ask you who had the majority in and control of the Senate? Who had control of the White House? If the Democrats of the House passed a dollar of appropriation that was not right, or not in the interest of the Government and the people, why did not the Republican majority in the Senate defeat it? Who was in the White House? If there was a single dollar of needless appropriation, if there was a wrongful or extravagant dollar in any appropriation passed by the Democratic House, why did not your Republican President, Mr. Taft, veto the bill? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHIN. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman, or any other, if my time can be extended.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes. This is just one question.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right, just one.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman from North Carolina said that I made misstatements about the Democratic Party in this House. I may be wrong; and, if so, I want to be corrected.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am correcting you now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. The authority that I have is the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]. Does the gentleman question that authority?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. [Laughter.] I want to say here that Republicans have never been able to sustain themselves respectably in any way except by quoting Democrats as authority. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say this before I yield: Now, gentlemen, you know that I do not object to any Republican or Democrat interrupting me at any time, but I have some important things to say that will, I hope, enlighten the Republicans here, especially the new ones, and unless you are going to extend my time I shall have to ask you all to wait until I get through, and then I will be pleased to answer any question anyone may ask.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has an hour and I had only 10 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. And nobody interrupted the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman from North Carolina has referred to some of us by name, incorrectly under the rules.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, it is almost unparliamentary to refer to the gentleman by name in this House. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] If you have a real good and wise question, it will keep. Now, I will ask the gentleman to take his seat, and when I get through and if he will consent to an extension of time, I will answer ever question that he or anyone will ask.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not want to have the record quoted?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield when I get through. Let me return to this alleged Democratic extravagance, the appropriations for which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] reminds us were made in a Democratic House. It is true that the Democrats had control of the House. It is equally true that the Republicans had control of the Senate and a Republican President was in the White House. Before proceeding further I wish to remind the House and the country that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], the minority ranking member of the Appropriations Committee, who now complains of Democratic extravagance, voted for every dollar of the $1,109,000,000 that that Democratic House appropriated. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, I deny that statement.

Mr. KITCHIN. How can the gentleman deny it when his record shows it?

Mr. GILLETT. But my record will not show it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Very well; let us see. The gentleman was on the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. And of course if there was anything wrong on that committee he would know about it. He is the ranking member on the committee. He had six Republicans with him, did he not?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, gentlemen, in all fairness, he sat there for months and months——

Mr. GILLETT. And 14 Democrats——

Mr. KITCHIN. Helping to frame those bills, and he knew every item in every one of the bills. Members of the House not on the committee have not time to look into all the details of the bills. Now, my friend, if there was a single dollar in those appropriations that ought not to have been expended why did you not file a minority report and come in on this floor and warn the House and the country against it? [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the gentleman did not. He came in and voted for every one of the bills that came from his committee, and if he shows me a single vote on record where he or any other Republican on the Appropriations Committee voted against a single item, then I will vote against this resolution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman will consult the RECORD he will find a great many arguments which I made against the appropriations.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, arguments! [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Arguments! Why, gentlemen, I have heard Republicans argue against this and that, and then go and vote right squarely against their arguments. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No doubt you did, but I do not recall it, because your arguments will go back to your people for political purposes; but what I am talking about is the vote—your vote.

Mr. GILLETT. I have always voted the way I have argued.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then the gentleman did not argue against these bills, because I have looked up the votes of every one of you. There is another thing I desire to ask the gentleman. Did he file a minority report against a single item in the bills?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not remember.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman does not remember. I do—I know. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] And he did not. Why, gentlemen, I know more about Republicans—these old Members—than they do themselves, and I am going to teach you young Members something before I get through. [Laughter.] We have other committees that make appropriations. On every committee in this House there are Republican Members. There were seven Republican Members in the last Congress on every committee that made appropriations, and if there was a dishonest, needless, extravagant dollar in any one of the bills reported to the House, it was their duty as Representatives, it was their duty as honest men, to come into this House and file a minority report against it and call attention of the House and country to it; but not a minority report by a Republican against a single dollar recommended by any appropriation committee.

Instead of being more extravagant, we were $17,258,000 more economical than the Republicans were. But if we were extravagant, you Republicans are estopped from protest or complaint because you approved and voted for such extravagance. Your charge that we appropriated more money under Wilson than you did under Taft, if true, coupled with the fact that you voted for the appropriation under Wilson, is a splendid tribute you pay to the patriotism and integrity and wisdom of Woodrow Wilson and his administration. If more money was appropriated, it was needed when Taft was President as well as when Wilson was President. Did you withhold it from Taft because you did not have the confidence in the patriotism and integrity of the Taft administration? And did you grant it to Wilson because you had such confidence in the patriotism and integrity of his administration that you knew that every dollar put into its hands would be expended for the Government's needs and the public good? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, as to the repeated assertion by Republicans that the Underwood Act is a failure as a revenue producer—why, Uncle JOE, I apologize; it is unparliamentary, but I wish to say that these gentlemen over here on the Republican side have gotten so keen and shrewd that they even fool you about this revenue business and got you to talking about the Underwood Act being a failure. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

To the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], the ranking Republican Member on our committee; the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]; and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]; and other Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee, all of whom have declared that the Underwood Act was a failure as a revenue producer, I am going to lay down this proposition, and I will give you and all other Republicans from now until Congress adjourns to refute it.

Instead of the Underwood Act being a revenue-producing failure, the fact is, that from the time it went upon the statute books, October 3, 1913, to August 1, 1914, the date of the breaking out of the European war, the Underwood Act produced $10,889,000 more than the Payne Act for the same months in the preceding year did. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. It is not so.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is not so from a Republican standpoint, but I am talking from the standpoint of truth and facts. [Loud laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] In the last four years every answer a Republican has been able to make against a sound argument and a plain fact is, "'Tain't so." [Laughter on the Democratic side.] All right. Let us see if it is not so. The Underwood bill became a law on October 3, 1913. I repeat, from October 3, 1913, to August 1, 1914, the day the European war began, the Underwood Act produced $10,889,000 more than the Payne Act for the identical months of the preceding year—its last year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MANN. Are those import duties?

Mr. KITCHIN. Import duties and income tax. [Laughter and cries of "Oh!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. How candid my friend was to the House! [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I said the Underwood Act—not the tariff provision of it, but the whole act, and compared it with the Payne Act, not the tariff provision of it, but the whole act. The Payne Act was not all an import act, was it? You recognized, and it was so stated on the floor by Mr. Payne during the pendency of the Payne bill, that to make up the deficit in customs receipts it was necessary for you to put a corporation tax into that bill, and you did it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So the Payne Act was not all an import tariff act. It included the corporation tax. This was as much a part of the act as the tariff provision. We declared expressly on this floor during the pendency of the Underwood bill that what we lacked in custom receipts we would make up with the income tax, which is as much a part of the act as the tariff provision of it. We knew, as you know, that the late Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, a loyal, staunch Republican, was right when he said that under the standpat Republican protective tariff for every dollar that went into the Treasury $5 went into the pockets of the protected manufacturers and monopolists. We resolved that that outrage on the American people and that robbery of them should not be tolerated, and we largely reduced the tariff tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We put into the act an income tax which raised $80,000,000 and every dollar of that went directly into the Treasury for the benefit of the people. To collect that amount under a Republican protective tariff—the Payne Act—the people would have to pay $480,000,000—$80,000,000 to the Treasury and $400,000,000 to the protected interests. I will now give the revenue figures. From October 3, 1913, to August 1, 1914, we collected under the Underwood Act $306,776,000, while for the same identical month under the Payne Act, the year before—its last year—we collected only $295,887,000, making a difference in favor of the Underwood Act over the Payne Act, as stated before, of $10,889,000.

But it may be said—and I think so claimed in the minority report on this bill at the last session—that this is not a fair comparison, for the reason that wool did not go to the free list until December 1 and that woolen goods did not go to a lower rate until January 1, and that, therefore, in those figures I take a part of the revenue under the Payne-Aldrich Act.

Well, let us take the period when the Underwood Act was in full operation. It was in full and unhampered operation from January 1, 1914, to the breaking out of the war in Europe—that is, to August 1, 1914—except as to the little matter of $2,000,000 from sugar, to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] is about to allude, as to which the act did not go into effect until March 1, 1914. How did it stand in comparison with the Payne Act, with the corporation tax in it, for the same seven months of the previous year?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FORDNEY. For five months during that time, for the first time in 40 years, our imports exceeded our exports. That was in 1914, in April, May, June, and July. Our imports exceeded our exports for those months. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. All right; young Members, be careful about applauding that, because he has put himself right into a hole, and will drag you in before you know it. [Laughter.] The gentleman says that for the months of April, May, June, and July, four months, during the first year's operation of the Underwood Act, our imports exceeded our exports. This is true. But he does not tell you, which is equally true, that for the two months of February and March in the first year's operation of the Payne Act the imports exceeded the exports by over $24,000,000; that the excess of imports over exports for only two months under the Payne Act was over $4,000,000 more than the excess of imports over exports for the four months of April, May, June, and July under the Underwood Act. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, it is a natural thing for the young Members to applaud a statement like that made by the gentleman from Michigan; but I suggest to you to save your hands until you get the whole truth. [Laughter.] To be more exact, from April, May, June, and July, the four months to which the gentleman refers in the first year of the Underwood Act, there was a balance of trade against us of $20,500,000, while in the two months, February and March, of the first year of the Payne Act, there was a balance of trade against us of $24,901,000; and yet he has the audacity to interrupt a gentleman about such a little thing as that when he is trying to enlighten the House. [Laughter.]

All right. Let us return to a comparison of the revenue-producing virtues of the Payne and Underwood Acts. From January 1 to August 1, 1914, the seven months in which the Underwood Act had its full, free operation, unhandicapped by the European war, it produced revenue to the amount of $233,954,641, while the Payne Act for the same seven months of the preceding year produced only $215,756,042. The Underwood Act, therefore, produced for the seven months, from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, the beginning of the European war, $18,198,599 more revenue than the Payne Act did for the same seven months the year previous. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Did you catch those figures, Brother FORDNEY? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman hereafter will comply with the rules of the House. He is one of the oldest Members of the House and the leader of the majority side of the House, so that at least by his example the young Member will not be led astray. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. MANN. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I hope the gentleman will observe the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from North Carolina is constantly referring to Members, out of order, by name; constantly doing it. I did not desire to do anything more than to make a friendly suggestion. If the gentlemen on that side of the House do not know how to be courteous, it would be unfortunate. Except to make a friendly suggestion I would not have mentioned it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will be courteous. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It will set to new Members a bad example.

Mr. KITCHIN. I assure the gentleman I would not set a bad example.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will admonish gentlemen that gentlemen must be addressed in the third person. The Chair also wishes to suggest to gentlemen of the committee that it is a breach of order for gentlemen to sit in their seats and interrupt the Member who has the floor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, indulge me in just a little apology. If I had thought about it, I would not have violated any rule in that respect. I may have done so, but I was not conscious of it. But I do not see why it should be out of order to address the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] as "Brother FORDNEY." [Laughter.] But maybe it is. Another thing, I just felt so sorry for these gentlemen who had made such rash misstatements, and, getting caught, looked so humiliated and penitent, that I naturally addressed them in the affectionate term of "brother" without thinking. [Laughter and applause.]

I wish to impress upon the House some further facts with respect to the revenue during the operation of the Underwood Act before the commencement of the European war. From October 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, we raised from all sources, including the Underwood Act and internal revenue, $20,743,893 more than was raised for same period the preceding year from the Payne Act and all other sources. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

From January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, when the Underwood Act was in full operation, we raised from all sources $27,240,127 more than was raised for the same months the preceding year by the Payne Act and all other revenue sources. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That is not all. Comparing same months from October 1 to August 1 of Underwood Act and other sources of revenue with Payne Act and other revenues for 1912, the excess of the Underwood Act period over the Payne Act period is over $40,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In face of these facts I want to ask you seriously this question: Would it be honest or fair or right for any of you Republicans to ever again get up on the floor of this House or elsewhere and talk about the Underwood Act being a failure as a revenue producer? Do not do it any more, gentlemen. You know better now. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

If I can proceed without interruption for a few minutes, I propose to refute the oft-repeated charges by Republicans on this floor and elsewhere that the Underwood Act had caused large deficits in the Treasury. I at once remind the House and the country that August 1, 1914—the date of the outbreak of the European war—under Woodrow Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act, was the first August 1 in five years when the books of the Treasury Department showed an actual surplus of ordinary receipts over ordinary disbursements. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Every single August 1 in the four years of Taft's administration and the Payne Act showed a deficit. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] Gentlemen, let us see about these deficits. Just take a pencil, you gentlemen of the minority, and make a note of the truth about deficits! Let us take conditions on August 1. I do not arbitrarily fix that date. The European war fixes that date. Up to August 1, 1914, the Wilson administration and Underwood Act was unhampered by war. Now note: On August 1, 1913, the last year of the Payne Act, there was a deficit of ordinary disbursements over ordinary receipts of $9,563,000. That is one year. On August 1, 1912, there was a deficit of $292,000. That is two years. On August 1, 1911, there was a deficit of $15,524,000. That is three years. Now here comes the first year of the Payne Act, the year with which we can more properly compare ours: On August 1, 1910, the deficit was $10,055,000. On the first August 1 after Taft was inaugurated as President the deficit amounted to $14,000,000.

But on the first August 1—1914—after the Underwood Tariff Act had been in force 10 months, under Woodrow Wilson as President, for the first time in five years the deficit was turned into a surplus, and that surplus was $1,500,000. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Let me also remind the House and the country that, excluding the Civil War period, the three largest deficits in the history of this Government before the outbreak of the European war occurred when Republican tariff bills were on the statute books. Under the McKinley Act, at the close of the fiscal year of 1894, there was a deficit of $69,000,000. In 1899, under the Dingley Act, there was a deficit of $89,000,000; and in 1909, again under the Dingley Act, and Taft as President, there was a deficit of $58,000,000. There never had been another time, except during the Civil War—not even during Taft's administration—until the European war, when a fiscal-year deficit ever reached any of those figures.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to have the gentleman inform us of the expenditures for the Panama Canal during those years.

Mr. KITCHIN. All right; and I will take 1911 and 1912. The Republican administration issued $50,000,000 of bonds to help swell the surplus fund and prevent deficits. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to answer your question.

Mr. LENROOT. That is what I want.

Mr. KITCHIN. In 1911 Taft issued $33,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds, and put that amount into the general surplus. Again in 1912 he issued $18,000,000 more of canal bonds, and put that into the general surplus.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is it not a fact that over $300,000,000 had been spent by the Treasury for the Panama Canal and only $134,000,000 obtained by the sale of bonds, and is it not fair for the gentleman from North Carolina to state that?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it would not be fair, because it would not be so, for the Taft administration never spent $300,000,000 on the canal, and you have got the figures wrong. Please sit down one minute. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Republicans saw that they were going to get into a hole in 1911, and they sold $33,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds to put that money back in the general surplus fund to swell it, and in 1912, when their campaign was coming on, they issued $18,000,000 of bonds to add to the general surplus fund. But we Democrats have spent more than $40,000,000 on the Panama Canal out of current funds, and we have not issued a bond to help out the general surplus fund. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

At this point I will answer, once for all, the Republican persistent charge that Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act had caused the general surplus fund to dwindle away or to be largely reduced.

I make bold this statement, and I challenge you to dispute it. Exclusive of the proceeds of Panama Canal bonds, on the 1st day of August, 1914, after the Underwood bill had had seven months of untrammeled operation, we had a larger surplus fund on hand in the Federal Treasury by over $15,000,000 than you had on the 1st day of August in any year of the four years of Taft's administration. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] When the Underwood bill passed on October 3, 1913, up to which time all the revenues had been collected under Republican statutes and all money expended under Republican appropriation acts, we found in the Treasury only $123,000,000 of the general surplus fund, but under the operations of Woodrow Wilson's administration and the Underwood Tariff Act we increased that surplus until on August 1, 1914, on the breaking out of the European war, we had the magnificent surplus of $158,384,000, the highest figure that it had reached on any 1st day of August in any of the four preceding Republican years. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] I want these Republican gentlemen who are continually denouncing—without a shadow of fact on which to base such denunciation—the administration and the Underwood Act for destroying or reducing the general surplus fund to take a pencil and note these facts:

On August 1, 1913, there was a surplus of $131,454,000.

On August 1, 1912, less canal bonds, there was a surplus of $138,485,000.

On August 1, 1911, less canal bonds, there was $135,054,000.

In 1910, the first year of the Payne-Aldrich Act, the surplus was only $91,999,000.

But on August 1, 1914, under the Wilson administration and Underwood Tariff Act, the surplus reached the amount of $158,384,000, or $66,000,000 more than under the first year of your blessed Payne Act [applause on the Democratic side], and $20,000,000 more than the best year of the Payne Act and Taft administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do you get that? [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just a little while.

Mr. FORDNEY. Just to correct a statement.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to any Republican to correct any statement made by a Democrat, if he can, because it would be such an unusual thing—almost a phenomenon. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FORDNEY. A Democratic document shows that the total expenditures to December 14, 1915, on the Panama Canal, some of them under this administration, were $375,200,000 and the receipts from the sale of bonds were $134,631,000, so, therefore, I was right in my question a minute ago.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was right in my statement that every dollar received for a canal bond was received under a Republican administration. Wilson's administration never issued any canal bonds to recoup the amount paid out for construction of the canal.

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not deny that. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But there has been but a small amount of money expended under Democratic administration in proportion to the amount that was expended under the Republican administration for the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Republican or Taft administration, as we were discussing the surplus under Taft's administration, had expended over $300,000,000 for Panama Canal construction.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him. I said that over $300,000,000 had been spent in the construction of the Panama Canal, and that only $134,000,000 of that money had been obtained by the sale of Panama Canal bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is right; but I did not so understand him in his first statement. I thought he referred to the amount paid out by the Taft administration as we were discussing that administration.

Mr. FORDNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but that is not what he said at all.

Mr. KITCHIN. Republicans charge that the Underwood Act drained the Treasury of gold. Let us now ascertain the truth about this.

On August 1, 1910, a year after the Payne Act had passed, the gold surplus (over the $150,000,000 legal reserve) in the Treasury was $78,421,000.

On August 1, 1911, another year of the Payne Act, the gold surplus was $112,780,000.

On August 1, 1912, another year of the Payne Act, it was $118,747,000.

But on August 1, 1914, under Woodrow Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act, the gold surplus was more than $130,000,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In other words, instead of causing the Treasury to lose gold, Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act in its first year up to August 1 put $52,000,000 more gold into the Federal Treasury for the people of the United States than was there at the same time the first year of the Payne Act and $18,000,000 more than was there on August 1 of the best year of the Taft administration. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As I understand it, the gentleman regards the Underwood tariff law as a complete success as a revenue raiser.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not regard it so—I know it is.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, why was it necessary to impose an income tax and a war-revenue tax?

Mr. KITCHIN. Why was it necessary for the Republican Party to enact a corporation tax? I will tell you why it was necessary to impose an income tax. It was because we felt and believed, with the late Senator Dolliver, that when you raise revenue by a protective tariff, your method, for every dollar that goes into the Federal Treasury five go into the pockets of the protected interests in and out of your State; but when revenue is raised by an income tax, every dollar collected goes to the Treasury and not a dollar to the special interests. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In other words, if you raised $80,000,000—as we did by the income tax—by the gentleman's plan we would have to tax the people $400,000,000 more, not for the Treasury but for the tariff barons. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

A war or emergency revenue measure such as is now pending was enacted because the European war stopped a large portion of dutiable importations, and we had to raise enough to make it good. But, gentlemen, I do not hesitate to assert—and the assertion is susceptible of the plainest proof—that there would be larger deficits in the Treasury if the Payne Act had been in operation during the European war instead of the Underwood Act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was it the European war? Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] please to get the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to take his seat and not interrupt me until I get through. [Laughter.] Then I will answer any questions, if I have time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I can not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask if the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania after addressing the Chair must not address further remarks to the gentleman from North Carolina until the gentleman from North Carolina has indicated that he is willing to yield, and all Members of the House must observe the rules.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am willing to, but I have not the time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he addresses the Chair——

Mr. KITCHIN. I do decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina will suspend. The gentleman from Illinois rises to a question of order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he addresses the Chair, if he desires to know whether some gentleman will yield, must make the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair make this statement: All Members of the House can readily see that when a gentleman addresses the Chair for the purpose of asking whether a Member occupying the floor will yield, it would be a gross discourtesy for the Chair to attempt to interrupt the gentleman occupying the floor in the middle of a sentence; and gentlemen should not persist in repeated attempts to interrupt a gentleman while he is endeavoring to speak. The rules are easy to observe, and the Chair will insist that no gentleman shall persistently address the Chair when it is very apparent that the gentleman occupying the floor does not desire to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. No; it will not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania addressed the Chair and asked if the gentleman from North Carolina would yield. The gentleman from North Carolina has yielded on a number of occasions, and I think he has been very lenient; but that inquiry——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Chair inquired of the gentleman from North Carolina if he would yield, and the Chair was inclined to think, from the gentleman's actions, that perhaps he was preparing to yield; but the gentleman did nothing that would indicate that he had yielded. The Chair can not attempt to regulate two gentlemen addressing the House at the same time. Members must realize——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have asked several times——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. He will not even permit the Chair to speak. Gentlemen must realize that unless the gentleman occupying the floor will yield that they must, under an observance of the rules, refrain from indulging in audible comment during the remarks of the gentleman who is entitled to speak.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Parliamentary inquiries are not in order while a gentleman has the floor. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield? The Chair hopes that when the question is answered the gentleman from North Carolina will indicate in some emphatic manner what he proposes to do.

Mr. KITCHIN. I decline to yield, with this explanation and apology. I have only a few minutes more to speak. I yielded to the gentleman three times. I yielded once and he asked a question and I answered it the best I could, though not to his satisfaction. I have something else I desire to say before I close. If I had the time, I would yield to everyone on that side, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without asking the gentleman a question, will he permit me to make a statement?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me get through this point. Let me first show that if the Republican Payne Act were on the books instead of the Underwood Act we would have a much larger deficit and you would have had to raise many millions dollars more by some kind of taxation than we are going to raise under this law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman refuses to yield, I understand?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I do decline to yield, and I do it with many regrets and on account of lack of time. Now, I have shown you that in peace times, before the European war, when importations were unobstructed by war, the Underwood Act, with its income tax, raised $18,000,000 more than the Payne Act, with its corporation tax. If in times of peace the Underwood Act produced more revenue than the Payne Act did, by what process of reason do you conclude that during this war it would produce less than the Payne Act would, which, in addition to the war, would be a further handicap to importations by its prohibitive tax on imports? It has been the opinion and the assertion of Republicans from time out of mind that if we lowered the tariff more importations would come into the country. In fact, when we passed the Underwood Act they made many and loud protests and predictions that a great flood of importations would rush in over the low tariff which would drown all American industries.

Their contention has always been that a low tariff induces increase of importations and that a high tariff, such as the Payne Act, obstructs and prevents large importations. Under the Underwood Act, imposing a low tariff, importations of dutiable goods have largely decreased since the war began; how could you expect more importations and a larger revenue during this almost world-wide war with importations further handicapped by a higher tariff, such as the Payne Act, enacted for the purpose of keeping them out? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

If the Payne Act had been on the statute books during this war, and the same amount of dutiable articles had come in as has been coming in under the lower Underwood Act, which is an impossible assumption from both a Democratic and Republican theory, and if the same articles which were transferred from the dutiable list over to the free list in the Underwood Act were being imported to-day in the same quantities as were imported under the Payne Act in 1913, which is another impossible assumption, the Payne Act would only have raised $24,000,000 more than the Underwood Act. But if we compare the proportionate difference between importations under the Payne Act and the Underwood Act before the war, and the excess of revenue of the Underwood income tax over the Payne corporation tax and consider the natural and inevitable decrease of importations by reason of the higher tariff rates of the Payne Act, if it were now in operation, it would yield under present conditions at least $25,000,000 less than the Underwood Act is now producing. There is not a thoughtful man, there is not a student of the revenue subject who, if he will make a thorough investigation, will not be forced to the conclusion that if the Payne Act had been in force during the war we would have to raise many million dollars more than we have to raise now, and that we would have many million dollars more of deficit in the Treasury than we have now.

Mr. Chairman, I have been interrupted so often I trust that the House will indulge me, in conclusion, in a brief recapitulation.

Republicans charge:

First. That the Wilson administration and Democratic Congress have been extravagant in appropriations—more extravagant than the Taft administration. There is no truth in this charge.

The fact is that exclusive of the Post Office appropriation bill, for which every Republican in the House voted, for the first year of the Wilson administration we appropriated $17,258,000 less than the last year's appropriation acts of the Taft administration, and for the last year—the present fiscal year—we appropriated over $10,000,000 less than the last year of Taft's administration.

Suppose we had been extravagant, Republicans are estopped from making the charge. Not a protest, not a minority report from a single Republican Member of a single appropriation committee against a single dollar appropriated. The Republicans in Senate and House voted for every one of the appropriation bills.

Second. That the Underwood Act has been a failure as a revenue producer.

There is no truth in this charge.

The fact is that from October 3, 1913, date of passage of this act, to August 1, 1914, date of the outbreak of the European war, the Underwood Act produced $10,889,070 more than the Payne Act did for the same months the preceding year.

And from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, the period of its free and untrammeled operation, the Underwood Act produced $18,198,599 more than the Payne Act did in the same months of the preceding year.

From January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, from the Underwood Act and other revenue sources there was collected $27,240,127 more than from the Payne Act and other revenue sources for the same months the preceding year.

The figures of record as to revenue collected are:

From Oct. 1, 1913, to Aug. 1, 1914 (Underwood Act)	$306,776,456
From Oct. 1, 1912, to Aug. 1, 1913 (Payne Act)	295,887,386
Excess of Underwood Act	10,889,070
From Jan. 1, 1914, to Aug. 1, 1914 (Underwood Act)	233,954,641
From Jan. 1, 1913, to Aug. 1, 1913 (Payne Act)	215,756,042
Excess of Underwood Act	18,198,599

Revenue from Underwood Act and all sources.

From Jan. 1, 1914, to Aug. 1, 1914 (Underwood Act and all sources)	$456,798,552
From Jan. 1, 1913, to Aug. 1, 1913 (Payne Act and all sources)	429,558,425
Excess of Underwood Act and all sources	27,240,127

Comparing same months of the Underwood Act and all revenue sources with same months of Payne Act and all revenue sources for 1912 there is an excess of the Underwood Act and all sources over the Payne Act and all sources of over $40,000,000.

Third. That Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act have caused deficits in the Treasury.

There is no truth in this charge.

The fact is that until the beginning of the European war the Treasury was in a better and stronger condition than at any time under the Taft administration, and that on August 1 of every year under Taft there was a deficit, and that August 1 under Wilson's administration was the first August 1 in five years when there was an actual surplus.

On August 1, 1913, there was a deficit of $6,563,165.
On August 1, 1912, there was a deficit of $292,000.
On August 1, 1911, there was a deficit of $15,534,935.
On August 1, 1910, there was a deficit of $10,055,338.
On August 1, 1909, there was a deficit of $14,005,564.

While on August 1, 1914 (at the beginning of the European war) under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act there was a surplus of $1,484,685.

Let it be noted that on August 1, 1910, the first year of the Taft administration and the Payne Act, there was a deficit of over $10,000,000, while the first year under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act there was a surplus of $1,484,685.

Fourth. That the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act had largely reduced the general surplus fund.

There is no truth in this charge.

The fact is that on August 1, 1914, under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act, the amount of the general surplus fund, exclusive of proceeds of canal bonds, was $20,000,000 more than on any 1st day of August during Taft's entire term.

The figures of record are:

On August 1, 1913, the general balance was $131,454,000.
On August 1, 1912, the general balance was $138,485,000.
On August 1, 1911, the general balance was $135,054,000.
On August 1, 1910, the general balance was $91,999,000.
On August 1, 1909, the general balance was $109,570,000.

But on August 1, 1914, under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act, there was a balance of $158,384,000, $20,000,000 more than the best year of the Taft administration.

There was on the 1st day of the first August under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act an excess over the 1st day of the first August under the Taft administration and the Payne Act of $66,385,000.

Fifth. That the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act drained the Treasury of its gold.

There is no truth in this charge.

The fact is that on August 1, 1914, under Wilson's administration and the Underwood Act, the gold balances in the Treasury, exclusive of the $150,000,000 gold reserve redemption fund, was over $10,000,000 more than on August 1 of any year of the Taft term.

The gold balances, according to the figures of record, in the Treasury, exclusive of the $150,000,000 reserve for redemption of the United States notes, were:

On August 1, 1912, $118,747,660.

On August 1, 1911, $112,780,235.

On August 1, 1910, $78,421,383.

While on August 1, 1914, under the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act, the gold balance was $130,551,354.

It will be noted that while there was an excess of the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act over each of the Taft administration and the Payne Act years the excess of the first year of the Wilson administration and the Underwood Act over the first year of the Taft administration and the Payne Act was $52,129,971.

Mr. Chairman, it will be conceded by all fair-minded men, Republicans and Democrats alike, that the just and proper way to judge and assess the value and virtue of the Underwood Act is to consider the effect of its operation from its passage on October 3, 1913, or at least from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, the time of the outbreak of the European war, which disturbed and dislocated the revenue conditions of every Government as well as the business and financial conditions throughout the entire world.

Taking this period of its full and free operation, unhampered by war, as I have in my argument to-day, the Democrats assert with confidence that from every standpoint of the Government's interest and the people's good the Underwood Act is far superior to any tariff or revenue bill that the Republican Party has ever put upon the statute books. [Long-continued applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes on the subject under discussion?

Mr. MANN. May I ask for order, so that we may hear?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] asks unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes on the subject under discussion. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, who makes the request?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON]. Is there objection to his request to address the committee for 10 minutes on the subject under discussion?

Mr. MANN. I will not object. I wanted to get plenty of time to talk on this side, and that is more than the time that we got.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I hope you will forgive my lack of modesty in attempting to address the House on an important subject of this kind during the first two weeks of my service in Congress. I intend to vote for the joint resolution [applause on the Democratic side], and I will do this notwithstanding that it contains a number of oppressive provisions which are burdensome to the people. This is an emergency act in the full sense of the word. We deal with an emergency which can not be controlled by the people of the United States. The peoples of Europe would have been glad to exchange their sorrows and afflictions for the burdens imposed by the emergency act. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I do not believe in the sincerity of the Republicans in opposing this measure. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have not heard a new word from them or a new idea. It was perfectly sickening to listen to those worn-out repetitions of "tariff, tariff, tariff," just as if the whole field of human thought had been exhausted by the idea of the tariff; just as if the entire vocabulary of the human race had been limited to the word "tariff."

They said nothing instructive, nothing definite, nothing that would lead us to better things.

I wish you would realize that the entire system of taxation needs revision. It is not scientific. It does not face things as they are to-day. The Democratic and Republican parties are both at fault in that they fail to comprehend that new times require new methods.

At some future time, with the indulgence of the House, I will explain the position of the radical democracy, of the industrial democracy, of the advanced democracy, the social democracy of the world on the subject of taxation. I believe in an income and in an inheritance tax. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I would make it impossible for incompetent men and unfit men to inherit by the mere accident of birth the power of millions of dollars and the control over millions of people.

I believe in taxing land that is not actually occupied and that is not used. I believe in a tax on land held for speculative purposes.

I make this short talk more to explain my vote than for any other reason. I can do a great deal better than I am doing now. [Laughter.] And I promise the House at some future time to be a great deal better. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, of course the committee itself can not give general leave to print. I see a number of gentlemen rising to address the Chair. What is the disposition on that side of the House?

Mr. GARNER. I do not think there could be any objection to a general extension on this particular bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope gentlemen will defer their requests until we get into the House, and then if general leave is not granted they can make their individual requests.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 59) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914 (Stat. L., vol. 38, pp. 745–764, inclusive), are continued in full force and effect until and including December 31, 1916.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 8, after the word "including," by striking out "December 31, 1916," and inserting in lieu thereof "the expiration of three months from and after December 31, 1915."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 161, noes 193.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 8, after the word "including," by striking out "December 31, 1916," and inserting in lieu thereof "April 30, 1916."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this will give four months after Congress reconvenes to consider revenue legislation, and it is the intention, so we are informed, of the Democratic side of the House to consider revenue legislation prior to May 1, in any event, concerning other matters.

Gentlemen of the House can not fail to have noticed that during an entire hour's speech by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], the leader of his party in the House and the gentleman in charge of the bill to extend a tax measure, he never by inference referred to the propositions upon which the House will vote. Never a word was said about the tax law which it is proposed to extend; no defense of any of the items in it; a speech which met with approval and applause on the other side of the aisle, but which made some of us wonder if the character of the House had changed any for the worse on that side of the House since the last Congress.

Here is a proposition to let this House consider the items in the law and not to hide, as the gentlemen seek to. Not a discussion of the question has been had in the House. The people are entitled to have their items of taxes considered by the legislative body when it is proposed to put burdensome taxes upon them and to have the different questions involved in it as to taxation voted upon by Members of the House. There is no discussion and no thought of ever letting the House itself consider the items in this law, which every day Democratic Members will say are unjust and unfair, and then go home and tell their constituents that they had to vote with the Democratic Party because they had no opportunity for considering the items. I give you the chance. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. KITCHIN and Mr. MANN to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 183, noes 189.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 8, after the word "including," strike out "December 31, 1916," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the expiration of six months from and after December 31, 1915."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin desires to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, we all upon this side of the House realize that it is utterly useless to offer any amendment to this bill with any idea of its being adopted. All that we can do is to make a record of our position upon it.

During the general debate the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] made a very eloquent plea for nonpartisanship in the consideration of this measure; and yet, Mr. Chairman, if it were not for the fact that Members on the Democratic side themselves first made this a partisan question, first took it into a secret Democratic caucus and tied the hands of every Democrat upon that side, with two exceptions; if it had not been for the fact that they have made it a partisan measure, it might have been possible to have adopted some of these amendments, and particularly the one now before the committee.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes to continue this emergency tax law until June 30 next, which will be the end of the present fiscal year. Some argument can be made that that ought to be done, in view of the fact that the obligations for the present fiscal year have already been incurred and that revenue must be provided to meet these obligations. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to impress upon the new Members, upon that side especially, that by voting for this proposition extending this tax law until December 31 of next year they cut themselves off during this session of Congress from considering the revision or amendment of any item that is found in the present law, except as the Committee on Ways and Means may graciously give them the opportunity to consider them.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. Would not a new revenue measure repeal this law at any time?

Mr. LENROOT. A new revenue measure can repeal the law, provided, and provided only, this same Committee on Ways and Means will give the House an opportunity to consider a new revenue measure. All of us on both sides of the House have had many letters from our constituents asking us and begging us to consider some of the unjust and inequitable items that are now found in this law. By this vote you will say that you do not choose to reconsider those items; and when you write to your constituents, as you have done, that you will give consideration to these things, remember that by the vote you cast here to-night you who vote for the measure deny to your constituents your right, representing them, to reconsider those items, except as the Committee on Ways and Means may graciously give you the opportunity to consider some of them, for under the rules of this House no amendment will be in order to any proposition that the Committee on Ways and Means may bring amending the present law, except upon the particular item that that committee itself selects and chooses shall be considered.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if the Republicans were in power to-day, the most that they would do would be to extend this law until June 30, because if they were in power, instead of extending it until December 31, they would seek to economize in the expenditures of this Government, so that instead of keeping up these very large expenditures, making these very large revenues necessary, they would make the expenditures accord with the income so far as possible, and if the European war necessitated expenditures beyond our income, we would meet that by the issuing of bonds, which would be paid and redeemed out of current revenues as soon as normal conditions returned and the Republicans could put into force a proper tariff law. This would be good business; it would be economy; but that is a question which our friends upon the other side have never given any consideration to, except in their platforms and upon the stump. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN), there were—ayes 167, noes 182.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "until," strike out "and including December 31, 1916," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "the expiration of the present session of Congress."

Mr. MANN. If this amendment should prevail, it would leave this law in effect until the end of the present session of Congress, whether that occurs next summer or next fall or possibly next winter. Of course if there is any intention whatever on the part of the Democratic side or of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to revise this tax law, there should be no objection to this amendment. If you intended to do anything with it before the next election, you would do it during the present session of Congress. There will be no other opportunity to change it until the Members of this House have been elected or defeated, and to some of them the latter word will apply, and they had better take warning.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division. I will not ask for tellers if I get a real square count

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 165, noes 180.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the joint resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the joint resolution to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FITZGERALD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House joint resolution 59, extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the joint resolution to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the joint resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to that committee to report the joint resolution back forthwith with the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN moves to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment: Page 1, line 8, after the word "including," strike out "December 31, 1916," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "April 30, 1916."

Mr. KITCHIN. I demand the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recommit.

Mr. MANN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 197, nays 210, answered "present" 3, not voting 22, as follows:

MOROS AND NON-CHRISTIAN TRIBES IN PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (H. DOC. NO. 422).

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith act No. 2403 of the Philippine Commission, entitled "An act making applicable to that part of the Philippine Islands inhabited by Moros or other non-Christian tribes certain acts of the Philippine Legislature."

Among the acts of the legislature extended to that part of the Philippine Islands inhabited by Moros or other non-Christian tribes is act No. 2325, which is amendatory of the Philippine public-land act, and which, under the provisions of section 13 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, may not go into effect or have the force of law until approved by the President and the Congress.

Act No. 2325 was duly approved as required by law, and I recommend that the accompanying act of the Philippine Commission be also approved. I transmit herewith a letter of the Secretary of War which explains the necessity for the enactment of this law.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 16, 1915.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution making appropriation to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa;

H. R. 3638. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.; and

H. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HAYDEN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William Wooster, H. R. 4895, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. RUCKER, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Nathan McDaneld, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution No. 60, with Senate amendment, and consider it in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, without waiting to hear it read, as it is rather late to-night and we will be in session to-morrow, this question can come up with other things. So I shall object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I thought as the gentleman wanted to take 12 hours of debate he would not mind taking more time now for business.

Mr. MANN. It is on account of the requests from the Democratic side of the House, where so many gentlemen want to go to the opera house to-night, that I make the objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, December 17, 1915, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 17, 1915.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that the ethics of our national life has its source and the measure of its power in the prayer life of the people. Our standard of values has come from the unchangeable will of God. Thou hast taught us to take in the spiritual as well as the material in counting the riches of life. Day by day we come to Thee that our hearts may be attuned to the divine standard, that we may know the pleasure of the divine will. May we not deceive ourselves. Long ago we have been taught that a good name is to be preferred to great riches and loving favor to silver and gold. So may we be exemplars as well as leaders of the people and receive our guidance from God. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SOURCES OF REVENUE (S. DOC. NO. 227).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 16, 1915, certain information relative to the probable revenue to be derived from duties and excise taxes on tea, sugar, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TRAVEL OF DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing in detail the travel of officers and employees from Washington to points outside the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1915, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TESTS OF MATANUSKA COAL (S. DOC. NO. 26).

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on December 10 a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting the report of the tests of Matanuska coal for use of the ships of the United States was received and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed. It develops that there are a great many illustrations in the report, and in order that they may be printed the Senate must give its consent. I ask unanimous consent that the illustrations be printed with the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and consent is given.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 59) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Texas, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of San Antonio, Tex., praying that the Government of the United States use its good offices to secure the complete emancipation of the Jewish people, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hill County, Tex., praying for moderation in levying taxes to increase the armament of the Army and Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Comanche, Tex., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting the right of suffrage to women, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 1331, Farmers' Union, of Vernon, Tex., praying for the creation of a system of rural credits, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a memorial of Bangs Local Union, No. 2398, Farmers' Union, of Brownwood, Tex., remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON. I present memorials numerously signed by citizens of the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against any increase in the armaments of the Army and Navy. I ask that the memorials be received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

Mr. THOMPSON presented memorials of the Society of Friends of Prairie Center, Alton, and Hallowell, and of sundry citizens of Hugoton and Liberal, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Church of Christ of Larned and of the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and of sundry citizens of Whiting, all in the State of Kansas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERN presented memorials of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wabash and of the Church of the United Brethren of North Manchester, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against an increase of armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a petition on behalf of the members of the National League of Commission Merchants residing in Chicago, Ill. I will state that there are 40 cities represented by branches of this organization. Thirty-nine cities are preparing or have prepared similar provisions protesting against the further continuance of the charges mentioned in the heading of this petition. The National Apple Shippers' Association, with headquarters at Rochester, N. Y., and the Western Fruit Jobbers' Association of America, with headquarters at Denver, Colo., comprise similar membership and representation and are likewise forwarding similar petitions. They are interested and directly affected under the provisions mentioned above. They all join in the petition favoring relief from certain provisions of the emergency tax of October 22, 1914. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIVELY presented memorials of the Society of Friends of Richmond, Sugar Grove, Oak Ridge, Newcastle, Noblesville, Fairmount, Marion, and Indianapolis, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Richmond, Ind., praying for a congress of the neutral nations of the Western Hemisphere to discuss vital problems of international relations connected with the permanent peace of the world, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLAPP presented memorials of sundry citizens of Big Stone County, Minn., remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cayuga County, N. Y., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, praying for a reduction of weights of parcel-post packages and a readjustment of the rates charged. I ask that the concurrent resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Concurrent resolution.

Whereas the glory and prosperity of Iowa has rested not alone in her wonderful farms, but also in her prosperous and beautiful cities and towns as well, and the prosperity of her entire citizenship requires a symmetrical development of both farm and city, for the injury of either is sure to bring a loss and depreciation to the other and a decline in the population of the State; and

Whereas the rates of the parcel post are so low for excessive distances and the charge for shipment is in such unjust and unfair proportion to the haul that neither the Government nor the railroads are receiving sufficient compensation to cover cost of service rendered and a large amount of trade that legitimately belongs to the inhabitants of the State of Iowa is being diverted to the great cities of the land in distant States. This policy is depriving thousands of our best and brightest young men and women of their birthright by forcing them to emigrate from the State in order that they may have a chance in the world; and

Whereas these great concerns in distant cities do not contribute in any way to the revenues of the State of Iowa, nor do they in any way assist in the education of the youth of our State; they build no roads or bridges and bear none of our many burdens incident to the development of Iowa; and

Whereas they are waxing fat upon the trade they take from our State and are fast developing into great monopolies that bid fair to equal if not excel in size the greatest manufacturing concerns in the land; and

Whereas it is the policy of Iowa to provide work and opportunity for all its children, and we believe the Federal Government, of which we are a part, should not tax the people to reimburse losses in the Parcel Post Service when these losses are incurred in establishing great monopolies that are fast sapping the life of our cities and towns and depriving our children of a place and opportunity in their own community; and

Whereas thousands of Iowa's citizens have petitioned the General Assembly of the State of Iowa to memorialize the Postmaster General and the Congress of the United States to limit the weight of the parcel-post package to a maximum of 40 pounds and make such readjustment in the postal rates as will eventually make each class self-supporting: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa (the House concurring), That the Postmaster General and the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, requested and petitioned to reduce the weight of the parcel-post package to a maximum of 40 pounds and make such readjustment in our postal rates and zones as will eventually make each class self-supporting, to the end that justice may be done as between all of the citizens of the United States and that the unjust discrimination that now exists against the State of Iowa may be removed.

The resolution was adopted.

STATE OF IOWA, SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, W. S. Allen, secretary of state of the State of Iowa, and as such officer the custodian of the acts and resolutions of the general assembly of said State, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a preamble and resolution passed by the thirty-sixth general assembly of said State at its session commencing January 11, A. D. 1915, as the same appears of record at page 1554 of the official senate journal of said general assembly now on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the official seal of the secretary of state of the State of Iowa.

Done at Des Moines this 14th day of December, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] W. S. ALLEN, Secretary of State.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of St. Mary's Total Abstinence and Benevolent Society, of Norwich, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Henry M. Woodward, of East Rindge, N. H., praying for the monthly payment of pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Philippine Islands, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

He also presented a petition of the International Reform Bureau, of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent sectarian appropriations, which was referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I present a memorial from the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans of Mississippi, appealing to the Congress of the United States to authorize and grant an adequate appropriation to enable the proposed celebration and the reunion to be held on the United States domain in the Vicksburg National Military Park during the month of October, 1917. I ask that the memorial be received and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States.

The National Association of Vicksburg Veterans, an organization composed of surviving Civil War veterans who served in the War between the States—1861 to 1865—through its officers respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States with a request for recognition and assistance in carrying out the commendable purposes of commemorating the events leading to the peaceful upbuilding to perpetuity the brotherly and fraternal amity between the North and the South.

Whereas in July, 1913, a memorial celebration and peace jubilee, supported by the United States Government and the several States, was held at Gettysburg, Pa., on the fiftieth anniversary of the battle fought at that place during the War between the States, and such celebration gave to the veterans of the Union Army, known as the Army of the Potomac, and the Confederate Army, known as the Army of Northern Virginia, an opportunity of meeting in such gathering of peace and amity; and

Whereas coincidentally with that battle an equally important event to this country occurred in July, 1863, in the siege and defense of Vicksburg; the remaining survivors of the Armies of the Tennessee and of the Mississippi in possession of mental and physical vitality now desire to join in their last national memorial celebration and peace jubilee to commemorate the victories and virtues leading to the half century of peace and prosperity to the American Nation, and further to strengthen the fraternal ties of brotherly amity in a united nation of States; and

Whereas of the 53,497 Civil War veterans that attended the Gettysburg celebration in July, 1913, 22,103 came from Pennsylvania and 22,072 came from 15 Atlantic Coast States—total, 44,175—while from 23 Western States, in which about 60,000 more veterans reside than in the Eastern States, and contributed 23 per cent of the State appropriations for that celebration, only 6,244 veterans attended. It will be noticed that the Gettysburg celebration was distinctly an Atlantic coast affair, which established a precedent to the benefit of the Civil War veterans of the North and of the South which we trust will be recognized; and

Whereas the Grand Army of the Republic, in national encampment September 20, 1913, and September 30, 1915; the Military Order of Loyal Legion of the United States and the Society of the Army of the Tennessee, October 1, 1914; and also the United Confederate Veterans, by divisions at various dates, have indorsed and render support in this proposed reunion and peace jubilee; and

Whereas none of the States, particularly in the great West and the South, enjoy the financial ability to bear the burdens of expenditures adequate to successful advancement of this proposed celebration, except to provide transportation and necessary incidental expenses to enable attendance of the veterans.

Now, therefore, the National Association of Vicksburg Veterans, in behalf of the surviving Federal and Confederate veterans who served in the War between the States—1861–1865—most respectfully appeal to the Congress of the United States to authorize and grant an adequate appropriation to enable the proposed celebration and reunion to be held on the United States domain in the Vicksburg National Military Park during the month of October, 1917, and to provide the necessary provisions, camp equipage, and utilities for the sustenance, comfort, and convenience of the attending veterans during the continuance of four to six days' celebration, in which all Civil War veterans of the North and of the South are cordially invited to participate.

With great respect,

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF VICKSBURG VETERANS,
F. A. ROZIENE, President.
J. M. VERNON, Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also present a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Society for the Development of American Shipping, of New Orleans, La., and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The memorial referred to is as follows:

THE SOCIETY FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICAN SHIPPING (INC.),
New Orleans, December 6, 1915.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
1607 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A pamphlet issued by this society was recently mailed to your address. We hope it has proven worthy of your earnest consideration.

The absence of adequate ocean transportation facilities for the export of our surplus products, serious at the moment, grows daily more threatening. We are rapidly approaching a condition of "peaceful blockade."

Unless we are to pay the cost of the European war in excessive ocean freights levied by foreign shipowners, American vessels must be provided for the transportation of our over-seas commerce.

The gravity of the emergency forbids indifference.

We ask only the assurance of your moral support in this movement to arouse our people to the necessity of immediate and concerted action that will avert the threatened disaster to our foreign commerce with its depressing influence upon our domestic prosperity.

If your spirit is with the endeavor, a word of approval and encouragement will aid the cause.

Please write us if publications reporting the continued progress of the society will be welcome, and oblige,

Yours, very truly,
GEO. S. TAYLOR,
Secretary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the Committee on Finance, I report back favorably House joint resolution No. 59, extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916, and I submit a report (No. 17) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon.

S. 898. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain tracts of land in the State of Nevada upon which continuous residence shall not be required under the homestead laws (Rept. No. 6);

S. 2519. A bill to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 4);

S. 2520. A bill granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada (Rept. No. 5); and

S. 2521. A bill legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada (Rept. No. 7).

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 18, authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to hold hearings, employ a stenographer, etc., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 8) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 33, to continue during the Sixty-fourth Congress the authority vested by resolution of February 20, 1909, in the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 34, authorizing the Committee on the District of Columbia to employ a stenographer to report hearings, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 35, granting authority to print and bind certain papers and documents for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 36, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, to hold hearings, etc., reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred Senate resolution 37, to authorize the Committee on the Philippines to hold hearings, etc., reported it without amendment.

Mr. WORKS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 9) thereon.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1053) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 10) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 1062. A bill relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices (Rept. No. 11); and

S. 1066. A bill authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands (Rept. No. 12.)

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 733) providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation in Wyoming, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 13) thereon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on the Philippines, to which was referred the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 18) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 790) to repeal an act entitled "An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of May 1, 1888, and extend the provisions of section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States to certain lands in the State of Montana embraced within the provisions of said act, and for other purposes," asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

ROCK RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 968) granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, and I submit a report (No. 14) thereon. I direct the attention of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the report.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to take up and consider and pass this bill. It is one providing for a wagon bridge over the Rock River between Rock Island and Henry County, Ill. A similar bill passed the Senate at the last session of the Sixty-third Congress and it went to the House and failed to pass in that body. This is precisely the same bill, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be put on its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOX RIVER BRIDGES, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 1230) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River, at Aurora, Ill., I report the bill favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 15) thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the present consideration of this bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 13, at the end of the line, after the word "point," to insert "suitable to the interests of navigation"; on page 2, line 4, after the word "point," to insert "suitable to the interests of navigation"; in line 7, before the word "and," to insert "SEC. 2"; and at the end of the bill to insert as a new section:

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved—

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two bridges across the Fox River, in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, in accordance with the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, as follows:

(1) A bridge over the east branch or channel of the Fox River in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation about 400 feet below the existing North Avenue Bridge over the Fox River.

(2) A bridge over the west branch or channel of the Fox River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation about 1,600 feet below the North Avenue Bridge, in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois.

SEC. 2. And it is further authorized that the work which has already been done upon these bridges, which may be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, may be used as a part of the proposed bridges.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRACE L. O'BRIEN AND MARY A. REILY.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 25, to pay Grace L. O'Brien, widow of John H. O'Brien, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 19, to pay Mary A. Reily, widow of Peter Reily, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already recognized the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. Two resolutions have been reported from the Committee on Contingent Expenses by the Senator from Mississippi giving the usual six months' allowance of pay to the widows of former employees of the Senate. I was about to ask unanimous consent to have the resolutions passed at this time. I do not suppose the Senator from Mississippi will have any objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is speaking under a misapprehension. I am no longer the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is now the chairman of that committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I had forgotten that for the moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I happen to have some personal knowledge with regard to these particular matters, and I do not think there will be any objection to the passage of the resolutions. The Senator from Pennsylvania, however, had better address himself to the Senator from Tennessee, who is the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from Mississippi kindly yield to me to ask for the present consideration of the resolutions? I have no doubt that the money proposed to be appropriated will be welcome on account of the approaching holiday season.

Mr. KERN. I hope that unanimous consent will be given for the immediate consideration of the resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I yield for that purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the first resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 25), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Grace L. O'Brien, widow of John H. O'Brien, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodation for the Library of Congress, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the second resolution reported by the Senator from Tennessee.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 19), and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary A. Reily, widow of Peter Reily, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expensese and all other allowances.

THE CORBETT TUNNEL.

Mr. MYERS. I report from the Committee on Public Lands the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, and I submit a report (No. 16) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the measure after it shall have been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution just reported by him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I dislike to interpose any objection.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Montana will give assurance that the joint resolution will not lead to any considerable debate, I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. MYERS. If it leads to any considerable debate, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, reserving the right to make an objection, I, at least, should like to know to what the joint resolution relates.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have the joint resolution read so that Senators may know whether or not they will desire to object to its consideration. I ask for the reading of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the reclamation fund in the Treasury supplemental and additional to the appropriation made in public resolution No. 56, Sixty-second Congress, the sum of $15,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of and to be paid to those persons who have presented claims remaining unpaid on account of labor, supplies, materials, or cash furnished to the contractor or the subcontractor and used in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel, including the spillway connected therewith, as a part of the Shoshone irrigation project, in the State of Wyoming, under any contract or contracts let for that purpose by the Government of the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to forthwith, and as soon as may be, investigate, hear evidence about, determine, and declare the several amounts due and remaining unpaid, if any, on account thereof, and to whom so due, and to certify the amounts due to the Secretary of the Treasury, who is hereby authorized to pay the several amounts so ascertained to the persons entitled to the same: Provided, That no such claim not now filed shall be considered: And provided further, That after certification as herein provided of claims approved by the Secretary of the Interior, he is hereby authorized and directed to certify, out of any of said fund left not covered by such approved claims, such reasonable amount to be paid to any person through whose services said claims were presented to the attention of Congress as shall fairly compensate such person for expenses incurred in such presentation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana from what committee does this report come?

Mr. MYERS. The joint resolution has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands. I desire to say that the appropriation provided for by the joint resolution, substantially in the same form, has been approved by the Senate two or three times, measures very similar having been passed by this body more than once. Such appropriations have been favorably reported by at least two committees of the Senate, once by the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and on this occasion by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, and similar appropriations have, with practical unanimity, passed the Senate two or three times. It is now considered urgent that it should be passed immediately, so that it may go over to the House and be considered there.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Was not a bill similar to this introduced at the last session and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands?

Mr. MYERS. It was at one time since I have been here, but some members of the Committee on Public Lands other than myself—I was not one of them—Members on the other side of the Chamber, Republican Members, expressed a desire to have this joint resolution referred to the Senate Committee on Public Lands; and at their request it was so referred—not upon my request. I did not have any choice of committees.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not intend to make any objection to the consideration of this joint resolution. My recollection is that the subject matter of it was at one time considered by the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and I have a pretty well-settled impression that the joint resolution is a just one. At the same time it involves an expenditure from the irrigation fund, and I think the joint resolution properly should have gone to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, which deals with that specific subject.

Mr. MYERS. I would merely like to say that it is my understanding that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was one of the Senators who preferred that this joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; it was not so referred at my desire.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how this measure differs in principle from many other claims which are presented to the Congress and referred to the Committee on Claims? I think it is a case where the contractor, for some reason or other, was unable to pay his bills, and the Government is proposing to relieve the employees who failed to obtain their money. It so happens that we have many claims before the Congress where contractors have failed, and, while I am not objecting to the payment of such claims if they are just, I wonder why it is that a claim of this kind can receive consideration at the hands of a special committee—I mean by "special" a committee other than the Claims Committee—whereas all other claims bills must go to the Claims Committee and come in on an omnibus bill, although they have just as much virtue and just as much justice connected with them as there is in this particular case.

Mr. MYERS. My answer to that will simply be to state the facts as I know them. The original appropriation in this matter was asked for in the form of a bill by former Senator Dixon, of Montana, who at one time was my colleague here. The measure was referred at that time to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands. I had nothing to do with the reference of it; I do not know how it happened to go there, but it was reported out by that committee.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. MYERS. With pleasure.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to say to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that the difference between this and other claims mentioned by him is that this is to be paid out of the reclamation fund; it is connected with the Reclamation Service. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is probably right, that the appropriate committee would have been the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, but this case does differ in that respect from the ordinary claims that are sent to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MYERS. I think that answers the question. As I recall, too, one measure containing a like appropriation was passed by the Senate without being referred to any committee, because it was felt that the matter was thoroughly understood by the Senate. As I have said, this joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands at the request of certain Senators on the other side of the Chamber, not at my request. I think the committee which gives it its sanction is immaterial. It has been reported favorably by a committee after due consideration; it is meritorious and I hope it may pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FARMERS' SAVINGS BANK, OF BRANDON, IOWA.

Mr. KENYON. On December 10 I introduced a bill, being Senate bill No. 1293, to reimburse the Farmers' Savings Bank, of Brandon, Iowa, for currency destroyed by fire, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It clearly should have gone to the Committee on Claims. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that action will be taken.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDWICK:

A bill (S. 2686) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry D. Geddings;

A bill (S. 2687) for the relief of the legal representatives of the estate of Benjamin Hamilton, deceased; and

A bill (S. 2688) for the relief of the heirs of Solomon Cohen; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2689) granting an increase of pension to William A. Abney;

A bill (S. 2690) granting a pension to Edward H. Carter;

A bill (S. 2691) granting an increase of pension to Alice Pollock; and

A bill (S. 2692) granting a pension to George E. Grubbs; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 2693) to provide an additional judge of the district court of the United States for the eastern district and the western district of the State of Oklahoma; and

A bill (S. 2694) to provide for an additional associate justice for the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WORKS:

A bill (S. 2695) to regulate the height of buildings on Sixteenth Street in the city of Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 2696) to authorize the President to award a medal of honor to Dr. John T. Nagle for conspicuous bravery at the Battle of Kernstown, Va., on July 24, 1864, while serving as an acting assistant surgeon of the United States Army; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 2697) granting a pension to Nana E. Sears; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. CULBERSON):

A bill (S. 2698) to provide for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Fort Worth, Tex., and for the remodeling, altering, etc., of the present post-office building; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 2699) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Busch, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

A bill (S. 2700) for the relief of John W. Healey; and

A bill (S. 2701) for the relief of William Walters, alias Joshua Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 2702) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver to the commanding officer, National Guard Armory, Anoka, Minn., two condemned bronze or brass cannon; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 2703) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

A bill (S. 2704) for the relief of Albert L. Ream; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 2705) granting an increase of pension to Aaron B. Waggoner (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2706) granting an increase of pension to Hubert P. Butts (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 2707) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Henson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 2708) granting a pension to Harriet F. Foster (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 2709) to establish a Reserve Officers' Training Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 2710) to encourage the establishment of an international peace-keeping tribunal and, pending such establishment, to insure the military preparedness of the United States of America.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, with reference to the bill which I have just introduced, I will state that I have not put upon it any request as to the committee to which it should be referred. It is a bill which it seems to me might go to either of two committees, and I should like to have the Vice President determine where the bill should go.

I will state that the bill is one which might properly be considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations or by the Committee on Military Affairs. It relates to the appropriation that may be made for preparedness, with the limitation that the expenditure, covering a period of eight years, shall cease whenever an agreement of some kind shall be made with the nations as to the ceasing of war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2711) to provide for the acquiring of additional lands by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes;

CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY ACTS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On December 7 I introduced a bill, being Senate bill No. 458, to revive the right of action under the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and I now introduce a bill on the same subject as a substitute and ask that it be read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2779) to revive the right of action under the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I introduce a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House to make certain investigations. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 60) creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution creating a joint subcommittee from the membership of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce and the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate the conditions relating to interstate and foreign commerce, and the necessity of further legislation relating thereto, and defining the powers and duties of such subcommittee.

Whereas a number of bills are now pending in Congress having for their object the further regulation of carriers engaged in interstate commerce; and

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission has, from time to time, made recommendations to Congress in relation to the general subject of regulation, some of which are now under consideration but have not yet been acted on; and

Whereas a system of governmental regulation of interstate commerce has now been in effect for 28 years, during which period the extent and powers of regulation have been, from time to time, varied and enlarged, and there has thus been accumulated valuable experience for the guidance of Congress in the premises; and

Whereas the growth of interstate commerce and the enlargement of the powers and duties of regulation have so increased the exactions on the Interstate Commerce Commission as to necessitate, in the public interest, the consideration of the best method of dealing with the situation and of expediting the public business; and

Whereas adequate and well-managed transportation facilities constitute a prime necessity of business prosperity and are a common interest of all the people, and in order to afford these facilities and to enlarge them as the needs of commerce increase the credit of the carriers and proper regulations of their operations are matters of fundamental public concern; and

Whereas as a basis for any further legislation that may be undertaken by Congress in this regard the whole subject of governmental regulation should be deliberately and thoroughly studied in the light of the experience and suggestions of the Interstate Commerce Commission, of the carriers, of the shippers, and of the general public, with a view to adequately safeguarding the interests of the public, securing the establishment and maintenance of transportation facilities adequate to the needs of a growing and expanding commerce, and assuring to private owners and the investing public just consideration and protection of their legitimate rights of property: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate and the Committee of the House of Representatives on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, through a joint subcommittee, to consist of five Senators and five Representatives, who shall be selected by said committees, respectively, be, and they hereby are, appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of interstate and foreign commerce, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress and with power to summon witnesses, to appoint necessary experts, clerks, and stenographers, and to do whatever is necessary for a full and comprehensive examination and study of the subject, and report to Congress on or before the third Monday in December next; that a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this resolution and to pay the necessary expenses of the subcommittee and its members is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said appropriation shall be immediately available and shall be paid out on the audit and order of the chairman or acting chairman of said subcommittee, which audit and order shall be conclusive and binding upon all departments as to the correctness of the accounts of such subcommittee.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. POMERENE. I introduce a resolution similar to one which was passed at the last session of Congress, authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make certain investigations touching the foot-and-mouth disease of cattle. The committee has not been able to complete its work, and they have arranged to take certain testimony during the holidays. I submit the resolution in order that it may be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and I shall ask to call it up after the matter now pending before the Senate has been disposed of.

The resolution (S. Res. 39) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof duly authorized by said committee, be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry concerning and report to the Senate thereon:

First. The extent and location of the territory affected by the foot-and-mouth disease and the number of cattle, hogs, sheep, and other animals affected thereby or exposed thereto.

Second. What quarantine or other measures have been adopted by the Federal or State authorities for the prevention or eradication of said disease.

Third. What changes, if any, should be adopted by the Federal or State authorities in their methods of quarantine.

Fourth. What remedy or remedies are known or used in preventing or eradicating said disease.

That said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths, and as early as practicable to report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

ADDRESS ON "THE NEW JURISPRUDENCE."

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have a very interesting address delivered by Mr. Francis B. James, commerce counsel, of Washington, D. C., at the dinner of the National Industrial Traffic League at the Toledo Club, Toledo, Ohio, on Thursday evening, September 9, 1915. I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to that course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The document will be referred to the Committee on Printing. Morning business is closed.

EMERGENCY REVENUE LEGISLATION.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution extending the time of the emergency revenue act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 59) extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914 (Stat. L., vol. 38, pp. 745–764, inclusive), are continued in full force and effect until and including December 31, 1916.

SEC. 2. That the appropriation for salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue, deputy collectors, surveyors, clerks, messengers, and janitors in internal-revenue offices for the fiscal year 1916 is made available for all expenses arising under the provisions of this joint resolution during the last half of the fiscal year 1916, including not exceeding $6,050 for payment of necessary personal services in the Office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in October, 1914, when the Congress enacted the present emergency law we were in the midst, as we are now, of a war; and as the result of the curtailment of imports following the reduction which had been made in duties, together with the almost certainty that there would be increases in expenditures incident to the war, the Treasury Department estimated that there would probably be a lacking in funds of something over $100,000,000 if the falling off which had been indicated by the few months between that period and the outbreak of the war continued. I do not now recall the exact amount, but I am inclined to think it was about $105,000,000. At that time it was not supposed that the falling off in the internal-revenue taxes of the country would be very heavy. There had already been a falling off of the revenues from this source of several millions of dollars, but the final loss to the Treasury has been very much greater than was then anticipated—the aggregate loss on tobacco and beer and distilled spirits for 1915 amounted to about $26,000,000. To meet the conditions then existing we were asked to pass an emergency bill which would yield to the Treasury, reasonably, a sufficient fund to recoup these losses, then estimated, as I said, at about $105,000,000.

As the bill passed the Senate it was estimated that it would yield about that amount, but owing to some irreconcilable differences in conference between the two Houses certain sources of revenue in the bill as it passed the Senate were eliminated, and it was recognized that the bill probably would not yield more than $90,000,000. As a matter of fact, it has yielded, I believe, about $80,000,000 between October of last year and the 1st of November of this year, which is practically one year, with a few days over.

The situation of the Treasury as a result of the loss of this revenue probably can be better stated by me by giving the figures with reference to receipts and expenditures during the present fiscal year.

Under the existing law it is estimated—and, of course, we can do nothing more than estimate as to the remaining six months of the fiscal year—that the total receipts will amount to $670,365,500, and that the total disbursements for the year will be $741,891,000, without providing for supplemental estimates and deficiencies now estimated to be about $12,000,000. That, of course, can not be definitely determined until the bill providing for those deficiencies is ready to be passed. This makes the aggregate disbursements for the year, including these estimated deficiencies, $753,891,000, showing an excess of all estimated disbursements over all estimated receipts of $83,525,500. This includes the payment of $25,000,000 for the current expenses of the Panama Canal.

That would be the condition of the Treasury if this emergency act is permitted to expire, by the limitation imposed in the act, upon the 31st day of December. It is estimated that the extension of the emergency act and the continuation of the existing duty on sugar would bring in $41,000,000 and $15,000,000, respectively. That is, the emergency act, if extended, would bring into the Treasury during the next six months $41,000,000; and if we should before the 1st day of May continue the present duty on sugar, there would be received during this fiscal year from that source $15,000,000, which otherwise would not be received. The passage of this resolution and the extension of the sugar duty would give $56,000,000 of additional revenue during the next six months. Deducting this sum, which it is expected to realize from these two sources if these two measures are passed, from the $83,525,500 that is estimated as the amount of the deficit at the end of the fiscal year providing these measures are not passed, there will then be an estimated excess of disbursements over receipts of $27,525,500.

If we do not extend this act, the moneys necessary to meet the current expenses will, of course, have to be taken from the general fund; and the sum which will be taken from that fund—amounting June 30 to $104,170,105.78—will be $83,500,500. If the emergency revenue act shall be extended, it will still be necessary for the Treasurer to resort to that fund, if there is no additional legislation between now and the end of the fiscal year, to the extent of $27,525,500; that is to say, even if this extension is made, and if the sugar tax is extended, at the end of the present fiscal year the general fund will have been reduced from $104,000,000 in June to $76,644,605.78.

Mr. President, I think this statement of the situation of the Treasury makes it just as imperative that this measure should be extended as its passage was imperatively required by the conditions which existed at the time of its enactment. It will not altogether relieve the situation, but it will reduce the extent to which the income of the Government is below the disbursements to an average of about $2,300,000 a month for the fiscal year.

It is true that the bill provides for an extension until next December. I can not say to the Senate—and I want to be frank about that—when further action will be taken; but I think it is apparent to all of us that in the present situation it is necessary, if the Treasury is to be unhampered in its finances, that it should have additional funds. Under any circumstances it will be exceedingly embarrassing if the Treasury shall be denied for the next six months a revenue now estimated to be from six to seven million dollars a month.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter into any discussion of this matter. The circumstances which surround the Treasury and the country are well understood by all Senators. There has been no material change in the situation so far as revenue from imports are concerned since the act was passed. When the act was passed we all expected, confidently expected, that the war would terminate by or before the expiration of the act. Unfortunately our expectation has been disappointed. No man can now see the end of this regrettable conflict, involving practically a whole continent and our largest customers in international exchange.

We may reasonably expect that the war will continue to the end of the present fiscal year, probably to the end of the coming year; and while the war continues we may expect a continuance of the conditions which have existed since its beginning with respect to our customs revenue. Revenues from this source for the fiscal year 1914 were $292,000,000, while it is estimated that during the fiscal year 1915 they will only be about $209,000,000.

The war has not only caused a falling off of imports, but it has brought about a change in the character of imports, and until these conditions are changed we will not realize from our customs taxes the amount of revenue anticipated from this source when the existing law was passed.

Of course, the large falling off in receipts from internal revenues, while to some degree attributable to industrial conditions produced by the war, has, in the main, been attributable to the rapid spread of temperance and temperance legislation, and in some part to frauds against this class of the revenues.

Mr. President, with these observations showing the necessities of the Treasury and the importance of extending this act, which, it is estimated, will yield about $6,800,000 a month, I shall content myself for the present.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate at this time with any extended remarks upon this measure, as the necessity of passing some kind of a bill to relieve the necessities of the Public Treasury is obvious to everyone. The propriety of adjourning this week until after the first of the year is generally admitted, and in order not to jeopardize that adjournment this joint resolution will probably have to be passed by the majority of this body against the protest of the minority.

I have listened to the laborious effort of the chairman of the Finance Committee to prove that there is a deficit in the Treasury. That deficit, Mr. President, is generally admitted. In my opinion, the figures cited by him give but little idea of the deplorable condition which that deficit will present when the figures are presented by the minority in this Chamber after the 1st of January.

This condition is blamed on the war in Europe, and the necessity for this so-called war tax bill is argued on account of the war in Europe. Mr. President, I say without hesitation, and it will be fully shown when this general subject comes up for discussion, that the very large amount of imported goods coming into the country now and ever since the war in Europe, did they carry a proper duty collected at the customhouse, would be largely sufficient to defray the expenses of the Federal Government. But they are coming in free, the large part of them, comparable in amount, although perhaps differing in detail, with the importations coming in before the war, but bringing no return to the Treasury of the United States.

These conditions, which are blamed on the war in Europe, would, in my opinion, Mr. President, be a thousand times worse were it not for the war in Europe. The war in Europe has been the only cause which has saved the fiscal policy of the party now in power from the most gigantic collapse ever witnessed in a civilized country. In my conservative and absolute conviction, I believe if we had not had the war in Europe we would have had the blackest times in the history of the American Republic, compared to which the depression under Cleveland's second administration and under the Wilson-Gorman law would have been insignificant. We would have witnessed poverty and starvation all over the country, bread riots, the Army of the United States out to preserve order and universal distress and misery. Instead of the war in Europe being the cause of such a condition, it has been the cause of the alleviation of a condition too dreadful for any lover of his country to desire to contemplate.

I take it that more war taxes are to be levied after Congress shall assemble after the holidays. Perhaps the current expenses will be met by the issue of bonds, or, as some have it, no further effort will be made to levy war taxes, so called, but the expenses of the Government during the remainder of the present Democratic administration will be discharged by the issue of Government bonds. Be that as it may, the majority in this Chamber is more fully advised than I am.

In my opinion, Mr. President, the deliberate thought ran through this free-trade legislation of impoverishing the Treasury of the United States when the Underwood tariff law was passed in order to justify the enactment of an income tax and other direct taxes. How else can we explain the folly which deliberately threw away the forty or fifty million dollars of revenue from sugar at a time when the American people were getting sugar more cheaply than any other nation in the world, perhaps with the exception of England, and there the difference was small, and at the same time destroying the great industries and financial interests of the great State of Louisiana and causing prostration and paralysis in the beet-sugar industries of the western country.

We have had another experiment, Mr. President, after 18 years of extraordinary prosperity under protective legislation, with the economic doctrines of free trade. Since the foundation of the Government two economic thoughts seem to have run through our history—one of free trade and one of protection—and more strongly every year, not only with us but with the nations of the world, the protective principle seems to be more and more strongly intrenched. Just as nearly every other nation in Europe and every other civilized nation in the world has established high protective tariffs the American people, in the desire for a change, voted to experiment with the free-trade propaganda and the Democratic Party was placed in power in the executive and legislative branches of the Government. We have had our lesson. In my opinion, the lesson has been bitter enough to justify the prediction that at the earliest opportunity the people will again return to the protective principle and that another generation of men will pass before they will ever again think of abandoning it.

What are these great Commonwealths to do if the Government of the United States absorbs all the direct taxes and at the same time forbids them from collecting money through the customhouses, while the Federal Government at the same time refuses to avail itself of that easy and indirect method of raising revenue? These great Commonwealths, empires many of them in themselves, are growing to an extent that was never thought of a generation ago. Good roads, health departments, compensation bureaus, and a hundred matters of activity, all requiring large sums of money, must be established and maintained by the States. Some are larger than others now, but there is not one of them which will not contain many millions of people in the years to come and be the seats of empire. What are our great municipalities to do, strangled as they are by the inability to raise money for the great and growing municipal needs of the twentieth century—sewage disposal, health departments, and all the many needs of a great center of population—costing millions of dollars, if unable to obtain the revenue except from real estate and a very few other subjects of taxation?

Everyone of these direct taxes ought to be repealed. If perchance a part of the income tax should be retained certainly its harassing features ought to be eliminated. There is hardly a tax in this alleged war measure which is not harrassing and burdensome and a severe handicap to business at a time when raw material entering into the various commodities affected are rising greatly in price. There is not a dollar raised under this measure which could not be raised just as quickly and much more easily by placing, even taking the Democratic point of view, a moderate ad valorem tax on importations coming into the country at the present time. And yet we have this monstrous measure presented to us here levying a war tax upon the American people greater, I am informed, in some respects than the war taxes which are paid by some of the belligerents in Europe so far as concerns the articles affected.

But, Mr. President, I have spoken longer than I intended. This whole subject will have to come up in January when the measures are presented by the majority providing for additional revenue or for the issue of bonds. A full discussion will then be had as to the real condition of the public Treasury as analyzed and viewed by the minority, and an opportunity will be offered for a full discussion regarding amendments imposing adequate protective duties to furnish the necessary revenue.

I referred a moment ago, Mr. President, to the condition which the industries of the country were gradually getting into prior to the breaking out of the war in Europe. In Philadelphia the city councils were called upon to make an appropriation of some $200,000 to aid the efforts of charitable organizations to establish soup houses for the unemployed. All over the great industrial Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, with eight or nine million people, the unemployment in large industrial centers was more and more a matter of alarm. That, of course, ceased with the advent of the war; but still, deep down in the minds of the people of Pennsylvania, and, in my judgment, in the minds of the people of the United States, is the grave and well-founded apprehension of what will happen when the war is over, when the millions of men in the armies of the billigerents return to the occupations of peace, when they will manufacture the cheap products of the cheap labor of Europe and dump them upon the greatest and best market in all the world, a market equal to all the other markets put together certainly at this time—the American market. That apprehension seems to be shared by many who gave no evidence of sympathy with the suggestion two years ago.

In the last Congress, when the present tariff measure was up for consideration, I offered an antidumping clause, such as has frequently been discussed in Congress in connection with tariff legislation, such as is found in the tariff laws of Canada and other countries. It was voted down. Now it seems that everyone admits the necessity of some antidumping regulation.

Mr. President, we should have an antidumping regulation based on adequate protective rates and should not rely on the inadequate and temporary suggestions that have been made recently and are not accompanied with a provision for a protective tariff. This problem can only be met by reenacting all along the line a law which shall protect American industry and render us independent industrially of every other nation in the world.

To-day, Mr. President, the textile industries of New England and Pennsylvania are threatened with absolute stoppage in a few months unless the dyestuff materials can be had. We have deliberately in the course of years permitted the chemical schedule of the protective tariff laws to become weakened on the demand of those whose constant cry has been to reduce duties, and as the result 3,000,000 people will be thrown out of work in the United States in the next two or three months unless those dyestuffs can be had. After a careful examination of the situation, for one, I do not see where they can be obtained. If there ever does come—as I believe there will come—a majority in the Senate and in the other House to take up a protective tariff measure and enact it into law, we should protect those dyestuff industries and all other industries in the United States to an extent adequate to make us independent of any other war that may occur in Europe or any other foreign complication.

With these few words, Mr. President, to record my protest against this measure and with the full intention of discussing the matter at length when the general subject comes up in January, I shall not detain the Senate any longer, but shall vote against the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I doubt whether there is a Senator who would dispute the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the Treasury of the United States is in dire need of funds. It is imperative that Congress furnish the money or the Treasury will become bankrupt.

I listened very carefully to the figures given by the Senator from North Carolina; they were very familiar to me, because he used the precise figures that were used by the Secretary of the Treasury in his statement issued on November 26, 1915. I want to say now that in that statement every estimate of the revenues to be received by the Government is magnified and that every expenditure therein referred to is minimized.

The Senator from North Carolina referred particularly to the revenue that would be received from the duty on sugar during this fiscal year if the free provisions of the present law are repealed, and he used the same figures that were used by the Secretary of the Treasury, claiming that the revenue would be $15,000,000. Senators, the duty upon sugar will remain as it is until the 1st day of May, 1916. All, therefore, that could possibly be collected from the duty on sugar until the end of the fiscal year would be for the months of May and June, 1916—one-sixth of a year—yet it is assumed that there will be collected during those two months $15,000,000 from sugar. In other words, we are asked to believe that there will be derived a revenue from the collection of duties upon sugar equal to $90,000,000 a year. There is not a Senator here who does not know that is not true.

On the other hand, the Senator referred to the deficiency that will occur as being $12,000,000. There is no Senator here who does not know that the deficiency will be more than $12,000,000. So I repeat that, so far as the estimates of the revenue are concerned, they are greater than can possibly be realized, and so far as the expenditures of the Government are concerned, or the payments to be made by the Government, they are less.

I hold in my hand the daily statement of the United States Treasury for December 16, 1915—only yesterday. What are the ordinary receipts of the Government and of what do they consist? What are the differences from the corresponding months of the fiscal year of 1915? The customs receipts for the fiscal year 1915 were $100,970,781.35; for the same period for the fiscal year 1916 they are $90,200,616.37, or an amount a little above $10,000,000 less than they were the year before.

No, Senators, it is not because of the difference in the collection of duties for the fiscal years 1915 and 1916, nor is it on account of the necessity for the greater expenditure of money for military preparedness for the defense of our country, for not one cent for the latter is involved.

Take the appropriations and what do they show? The Sixty-third Congress for the fiscal year 1915 appropriated $1,116,118,138.55; for the fiscal year 1916 it appropriated $1,114,937,012.02, or a total for the Sixty-third Congress, under a Democratic administration, of $2,231,055,150.57; whereas in the Sixty-second Congress, under a Republican administration, for the fiscal years 1913 and 1914 the total amount of the appropriations was $2,020,666,340.47, showing an increase of appropriation for the Sixty-third Congress over that of the Sixty-second Congress of $210,388,810.10.

I have not time, Mr. President, to go into the details of all of these figures, but I hope to refer to them before I get through.

I am opposed to this joint resolution, for it seeks to fasten on our people for another year burdensome and oppressive taxes, imposed, as has been alleged, because of the European war; but our own country is not involved in that frightful struggle, and so this is a war measure in time of peace. I am opposed to direct taxation unless it is uniform, which the present law is not.

I intend at the close of what little I have to say to-day to offer an amendment to the joint resolution extending the existing war-revenue law until June 30, 1916, the end of the present fiscal year. What reason can possibly be given for the extension of the law for a longer period? Why extend it for a year? There must be some reason that is not shown on the face of the joint resolution or in its wording.

The fact must appeal to the minds of all Senators that before the close of this fiscal year there must be something done, there must be some action taken, to increase the revenues of the Government of the United States or the Treasury will be bankrupt. Is it possible, Mr. President, that such action is to be delayed until after the next fall elections? Is it possible that our Democratic friends want to avoid until after the presidential election the imposition of further direct taxes on the people of the United States, which they must do in order to pay the running expenses of the Government?

I never would take the position, nor do I at this time, of refusing the Government of the United States sufficient revenue to pay the running expenses of the Government. It shall never be embarrassed by a vote of mine; and I want to go this far, Senators, and say that I would actually vote for increased taxes and for the joint resolution now pending if it became absolutely necessary to do so; but it is not necessary.

We may talk ourselves black in the face, but we are not going to conceal from the American people the true condition of the Treasury of the United States. We may juggle figures every morning, but I promise the Senate and the country that the people shall know exactly what their financial standing is.

There have been some very queer things undertaken and carried out successfully thus far. In this connection I want to say that the fiscal year 1915 opened with a balance in the Treasury of the United States, as shown by the statement from the Treasury, of $145,835,502.10, and on June 11 following it had shrunk to $17,780,831.39, or a loss during that time of $128,054,670.81; in other words, a loss of a little more than $10,000,000 every month. It is true that at the end of that month, June 30, the revenue from the income tax was poured into the Treasury of the United States and raised the balance in the Treasury, so that on June 30 of that year there were $82,025,760.03 in the Treasury; but note the rapid reduction. From June 30 to September 30 the balance was reduced to $40,898,894.26, or an average monthly loss of more than $13,000,000.

Strange things happened on the night of September 30, 1915. The statement of the Treasury Department was juggled overnight. With a decrease of actual money in the Treasury of the United States, there appeared a statement from the Treasury showing a balance in the Treasury the next morning of $128,063,545.23.

Mr. President, I studied the statement that was issued by the Secretary of the Treasury on Friday, November 26, 1915, and I prepared a brief statement in answer to it, and perhaps that statement will give just as much information to the Senate as if I went into the details at greater length. Therefore, I am going to take the privilege of referring to it; and I want to say to Senators here that every figure that is in this statement and all the figures I shall give to-day are taken from the Treasury reports themselves; they are figures as given by that great department of our Government.

This is the statement:

Having read with care Secretary McAdoo's statement, which was probably prepared with even more care, I am at a loss to determine whether or not it presages another change in the form of the daily Treasury statement, which has already undergone so many metamorphoses. Certainly Mr. McAdoo's statement issued this morning does not correspond with the daily statement of the United States Treasury issued on the date with which he begins his tabulations.

That is to say, the Secretary declares that on July 1, 1915, there was a credit balance in the general fund of $104,170,105, and yet the official daily statement of the United States Treasury bearing date of July 1 and 2, 1915, shows the net balance in the general fund to be $76,157,831, and this latter item is printed in the daily statement in bold type and shows a shrinkage from the previous day's statement of nearly $6,000,000. This difference alone amounts to $28,012,274.

NET BALANCE JUMPED.

Again, on September 30, 1915, the daily Treasury statement shows the net balance in the general fund was $40,898,894.26. The next day's statement, without the addition of the proceeds of a bond sale and with an actual decrease in the revenues of the Government over expenditures, shows the balance as $128,063,545.

This apparent increase of $87,164,650 in the Treasury balance was in bookkeeping alone and was procured by the transfer from the liabilities to the assets side of the ledger, the disbursing officer's balances, the Government bank-notes redemption fund, both of which always have been recognized as liabilities of the Government, and further by the inclusion of subsidiary silver coin, minor coins, and silver bullion, none of which had ever been reckoned as available for the payment of the Government expenses. The only way that I can account for this change in bookkeeping is the imperative necessity to make it appear that the Federal Treasury is not practically bankrupt.

At the close of business March 3, 1913, the Republican Party turned over to its Democratic successors a Treasury containing a net general balance of $149,335,711. On September 30, 1915, the eve of the first appearance of Secretary McAdoo's new and misconceived form of daily statement, that balance had been diminished by $108,435,816, which represented the cost to the American people of Democratic administration to that date. Nor is this all.

BIG BALANCE DECREASED.

The mythical balance of $128,063,545 which Mr. McAdoo so proudly boasted on the 1st of last October had decreased by the end of that month nearly $6,000,000. So that the total deficit under this Democratic administration in the Treasury up to the 1st of November of this year amounts to more than $114,000,000.

And, Senators, since the convening of this Congress, on the 6th day of this month, the Treasury of the United States has lost approximately $9,000,000. Is it because we are not importing goods into this country? Is that the reason? No, Senators; that is not the reason, for I call your attention to the absolute figures of importations as given by the Treasury Department.

For nine months of the fiscal year 1913, under Republican law, when there was peace in all the world, the imports amounted to $1,327,000,000, and the Government collected duties upon those imports of $242,624,000—an average duty rate of 18.3 per cent. In nine months of the fiscal year 1914, under Democratic law, with two months of war, the imports were $1,410,000,000. Note the increase. The duties collected by the Government of the United States were $193,166,000. Note the decrease.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was the average rate of duty then?

Mr. SMOOT. The average rate of duty had fallen to 12.3 per cent.

In nine months of the fiscal year 1915, the whole period being during the continuation of the war, the imports were $1,362,000,000, only a few dollars short of the imports for the nine months of 1913. Instead of collecting $242,624,000 revenue, however, the Government collected only $148,225,000, or a difference of $94,000,000, that the Democratic Party is now trying to impose upon the people of the United States in the way of direct taxation, thus imposing hardship upon them, interfering with business, placing a burden upon all, when their own figures show that if the principle that always has made this country prosperous—the great principle of protection—had been in force, it would have given ample means to the Treasury of the United States without the imposition of this burdensome so-called war tax.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator to yield for a question merely. The Senator has shown that there has not been any great decrease in imports, but there has been an enormous decrease in the revenues to the Government because of the low rates in the existing tariff law. I will ask the Senator if in his investigations he has discovered that this loss of revenue, this change in our fiscal system, has greatly reduced the cost of living to the American people?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the cost of living has not been reduced, but on the contrary it has gone skyward. The great hue and cry of the representatives and press of the Democratic Party that the cost of living should be reduced if the Democratic Party was put into power has fallen flatly to the ground, and they will have to manufacture some issue besides that in the next campaign.

And this splended result has been achieved without the expenditure of a single additional dollar for the national defense, and in spite of the fact that the Treasury in the meantime had received the benefit of the burdensome war taxes and the cumbersome and inefficient income tax.

Is the program for national defense to be slaughtered in order to show a favorable Treasury balance? Nothing is provided in the statement of disbursements by the Secretary of the Treasury for the building of the railroad in Alaska, nor is one cent provided for the administration's ship-purchase scheme, and with these few items and many more that could be mentioned, the total new revenue to be raised for the fiscal year of 1917 instead of being $112,806,394, as the statement shows, will be nearer $300,000,000.

Mr. President, the leader of the Democratic Party in the House agrees that that will be the minimum shortage; and I say that no man can go into the condition of the Treasury of the United States, no man can study this question, without being convinced beyond a shadow of doubt that Congressman KITCHIN is right.

Why, you are declaring that prosperity is prevalent all over the United States. Mr. President, I admit that we have prosperous times in many parts of the country at present; but I want to say to you, Senators, that the kind of prosperity that I want in this country is not dependent upon the roaring of cannon and the bursting of shrapnel on the other side of the ocean, nor is it measured by the number of orphans and widows being made in foreign lands. I would that we had the old-time prosperity, when peace covered the world, when the American laboring man and a million American industries all shared in that universal prosperity that brings contentment, happy homes, and a blessed country.

What a political blessing the European war has been to the Democratic Party. Before the war that party had demonstrated its inability and unfitness for the task of maintaining prosperity and providing adequate revenue to meet the extravagant appropriations made by it for the ordinary running expenses of the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to ask the Senator, when he comments upon the extraordinary appropriations that have been made, whether he has ever voted against a single one of those large appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes, Mr. President; a good many of them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the Senator point out one of them.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the record here now. The Senate knows as well as I know that I have called the attention of the Senate frequently to the appropriations that have been made. I want to say to the Senator that I do not know of anyone who has called to the attention of the Senate more frequently than I the unnecessary appropriations that have been made. I will ask the Senator's colleague if I have not on many occasions when he has been in the Chamber, and perhaps his colleague was not here, called attention to them.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it gives me pleasure to testify that in that respect the Senator from Utah has been a pleasing exception to his colleagues on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the Senator admit, if he will, that there is hardly ever a yea-and-nay vote on the passage of the big appropriation bills that are presented in this Chamber, the nays consenting to the passage of the bill on the final vote. Is that not a fact?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, after items have been voted down in this body and after every contested item has been passed upon it would be a waste of time and, generally speaking, would be bad judgment on the part of any Senator then to call for the yeas and nays on the passage of an appropriation bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You take a yea-and-nay vote on every bill that you are opposed to except an appropriation bill, do you not?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President. As far as that is concerned 90 per cent of them, perhaps, are passed here without a roll call. I have no doubt that 90 per cent of them are so passed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes. Then should one party be held responsible for bills 90 per cent of which are passed by the unanimous vote of the Senate? Should they be considered extravagant appropriations?

Mr. SMOOT. They are not passed by unanimous vote. They are passed because of the fact that Senators have voted against the items as they were reached, and then, as a whole, the bill is passed without any further discussion. That does not mean that the passage of the bill was an approval of it—not in any way, shape, or form.

I was referring when interrupted to the extravagant appropriations that have been made by the present administration. The figures that I quoted here in the very beginning show that one Congress, the very first Congress held under this administration, increased the appropriations $210,000,000; and there were not any items in those appropriations providing for the defense of the country, either.

In this connection we must not forget that the balance of trade against the United States during the four months preceding the war, at a time when the Democratic policies and a tariff law were in full force, was $248,000,000. A couple of more such four months and conditions such as obtained in 1894 to 1897, under the Wilson tariff law, would have been repeated, only in a magnified form, and at the same time the Government revenues were failing to meet Government expenses by approximately $1,000,000 per day. Eliminate the market created by a temporary, artificial European demand and American industry would be prostrated.

The first industries of the country to suffer from the present Democratic tariff law when conditions are again normal will not be the powerful corporations and great trusts, but the thousands of manufacturers with small capital, independent concerns making such goods as require the highest type of workmen and workmanship. In fact, I might say that as soon as the war is over and things become normal and the vast armies of men, women, and children are again put to work manufacturing articles of commerce, in order to keep body and soul together, with the only country able to pay for their wares, namely, America, God help our industries and our workingmen who will have to compete with such conditions. It is for this class of American workmen and industries that I am interested and I now tell all such that the only safe way to protect themselves is to see that the party that believes in protection is restored to power. In the past I have visited the leading industrial countries of the world and have seen there the value placed upon human labor. I have seen the poverty, the squalor and suffering to which the laborer is subjected, and I shrink from contemplating what it will be after the present European war is ended. I have seen the effect of such conditions on the men, women, and children of those countries, and I have made a vow that no act of mine shall ever place an American workman in a position of having to compete with such conditions. There is only one way to prevent it, and that is by a protective tariff, and, therefore, I declare that I am opposed to the burdensome and oppressive so-called war taxes in time of peace and shall vote against the pending joint resolution.

Mr. President, I now offer an amendment to the joint resolution by striking out, in section 1, "December 31" and inserting "June 30," and in this connection, as I referred to it before, I will say that that is the end of the fiscal year, and whatever action the party in power decide upon ought to be in force before then. I see no reason why the time should be extended beyond the present fiscal year. Mr. President, I offer the amendment as stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, section 1, in lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "December 31" and insert "June 30."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am conscious of the fact that the approaching holiday season imposes upon the Senate a somewhat brief discussion of the pending measure. I shall endeavor, therefore, to limit what I shall have to say to as small a space of time as possible.

I have noticed, Mr. President, during my somewhat short experience in this Chamber that the two great parties in the country alternate in accusing each other of extravagance in the administration of public affairs. I am conscious also that in each instance the accusation is well founded. I had hoped that, in view of the change of administration which took place on the 4th of March, 1913, the majority of Congress would appreciate the importance of minimizing public expenses wherever and whenever possible and of making a record which would commend itself both to its friends and to its opponents. But, Mr. President, I have long since reached the conclusion that extravagance in fiscal administration is something for which no party is directly and solely responsible. The party advocating protection is largely, though perhaps indirectly, so. The people of the United States are more and more coming to depend, and therefore to make demands, upon the National Treasury for financing various purposes never anticipated nor comprehended in the experiences of those who organized the Government. As each locality has multiplying interests of its own for which it desires appropriations, so individuals, increasing in number, are constantly clamoring for fiscal recognition through the agency of special bills. Consequently, there seems to be no end to these accumulating extravagances until the people shall themselves not only make a demand but by their conduct and cooperation see to it that the demand is obeyed.

I have run my eye casually, Mr. President, over the list of bills which, up to this time, have been introduced in the two Houses of Congress. They already run into the thousands. They have been presented by all the Members of both Houses of Congress. Indeed, I am unable to recall a single exception, save those who, up to this time, have not answered a roll call. I think I am entirely within bounds when I assert that fully 90 per cent of the four or five thousand bills already introduced in the two Houses call for appropriations whose aggregate is enormous.

Now, it must not be surmised that I am an exception because I am commenting upon these facts. Such is not the case. Many of my own constituents, alike with those of all other Senators, seem to be imbued with a notion that there is no bottom to the Treasury of the United States, and that while economy in the abstract is an admirable thing it should not begin at home.

I have, therefore, Mr. President, reached the conclusion, as before stated, that extravagance in the administration of the financial affairs of the Government is a national disease, for which constituencies are largely if not wholly responsible.

But I am equally convinced, Mr. President, that this growth of extravagance, this vast increase of appropriations, is the logical result of that system of protection with which men and women are chloroformed and then robbed by indirection. Their consciousness of the extent to which the burden of taxation is placed upon them is dulled and deadened by the fact that the taxation is indirect, and the interests which have been builded up, which are founded upon and which support the party advocating the policy necessarily encourage, directly or indirectly, all these increasing expenditures to the end that the sacred system of protection may not only continue to flourish but increase its bounties to themselves and their privileged posterity. Hence, the change of our fiscal system substituting direct taxation on wealth for indirect taxation on consumption, which happily was begun with this administration, and which, I trust, will be continued regardless of predicted consequencies by its enemies, will go far toward awakening in the minds of the taxpayers that feeling of self-interest which may cause them to take some part in and concern about expenditures of public money as well as their acquisition.

Mr. President, so much for the question of extravagance, the issue concerning which has been so early injected into our public discussions. But let me say, in passing, that the assertion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] regarding his protests against many past appropriations is correct. I have not witnessed, however, any cordial support to his position by those on the other side of the Chamber, and candor requires the confession that neither have I witnessed much support of it on this side. So as to the general question, if there is any politics in it whatever, honors seem easy.

But, Mr. President, all present evils, the necessity for the continuance of the emergency revenue law, the necessity for raising additional revenues hereafter, are being pivoted upon the repeal of the so-called Payne-Aldrich protection measure, which had it been permitted to remain in all its activities would in the eyes of its votaries and mourners not only have relieved us from all financial embarrassment and enabled us to avoid financial pitfalls, but led us to a higher level of fortune and universal prosperity. Indeed, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], in his enthusiastic devotion to that great measure, the enactment of which caused the retirement of a great number of his then associates in this Chamber, goes so far as to assert in deploring the repeal of that act—to assert that but for the war our fiscal condition would be a thousand times worse than it is. He also referred shortly afterwards to the conservatism of his judgment.

Now, the Senator is not given, generally speaking, to superlatives. He has made a close study of the pending situation and announces his intention to discuss it hereafter at great length, and I doubt not with his usual exhaustive ability. Hence I assume that when he stated that but for the war the fiscal condition of the United States would be a thousand times worse than it is, he spoke deliberately and based his statement upon careful information and investigation.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has informed us of the actual deficiency of the Treasury, the figures concerning which he declares have been and will perhaps continue to be juggled, that, notwithstanding the fact the deficiency on December 6 was $123,000,000 in round numbers, I must, therefore, conclude, taking his statement in connection with the assertion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that but for the war the deficiency would be one thousand times as great as it is, or one hundred and twenty-three thousand million dollars, an amount which is almost equal to the total wealth of the American Republic; and I must assume that if our actual condition has been minimized so enormously by the war, the prosperity of the country would have been proportionately increased in spite of the war but for the action of a Democratic Congress, and that our revenues instead of reaching the paltry figures presented by the Senator from Utah would have swollen to billions of dollars, giving us all the money necessary for expenses, justifying their duplication, and creating navies and armies compared with which those of Germany and Great Britain would be as nothing.

If this be true, Mr. President, certainly it should be equally true that the moderate reduction of duties effected by the Underwood law does not deserve the imputation that it is a Pandora's box of national ills.

The Senator also says that the sooner the Democracy recognizes the wisdom of raising revenues by duties the more it will be in accord with popular sentiment. I might retort that the sooner the Republican Party recognizes the wisdom of confining the taxing power of the United States to the raising of revenues and abandons that protective principle which means the robbery of the many for the enrichment of a few, the more will it be in accord with the sentiments of justice and political righteousness everywhere.

Another gloomy foreboding is cast upon the troubled waters of present-day politics by both the Senators, who have assumed the rôle, if not of prophecy, at least of apprehension, as to our industrial fate when this war shall have ended, when untold millions of cheap goods will be dumped at pauper prices upon the shores of America and when the people may be able to obtain the needs and comforts of life for about what they are worth.

Mr. President, the pauper labor of Europe and the pauper laborer of Europe have always occupied distinct positions in the Republican mind. The pauper labor of Europe is that dreaded specter which Republicans always see, and to which, I am sorry to say, they appeal with frequent success when arguing that protection is designed solely for the benefit of the American workingman. Pauper labor is their menace to American prosperity, and has been ever since there was an America to be prosperous. And now when pauper labor, killed off by millions, mutilated by hundreds of thousands, their property, if a pauper may be said to have any, has been destroyed, is far more dangerous, far more potent in its productive and therefore in its competitive energy, far more of a menace to American labor than it ever was before. Alive he was a formidable menace; dead he has become a more potent one; mutilated we stand aghast at the awful consequences that will inevitably follow when the surviving remnants of the contending armies return on crutches to their factories to work there and renew the manufacture of pauper-made goods for the American market.

Mr. President, when we consider this tremendous destruction of life and property, not only that which has passed, but that which will continue until this terrible war shall have ended, and there is no prospect of an early end, when we consider that industrial Europe is to-day prostrate and desolate and that at the end of this awful conflict she must gather her depleted and exhausted energies about her and strive to rebuild that splendid civilization which for the time has been destroyed, what time or opportunity will be vouchsafed to them to manufacture supplies for the purpose of dumping them upon the shores of this continent to the bankruptcy of the factory and the ruin of its artisans?

I confess, with surprise, Mr. President, that some men in high position entertain this apprehension. I deny that it is among the possibilities of the future. And how desperate must be the situation of that policy which needs such resort to so-called arguments for its support? My friends, the distinguished Senators from Utah and Pennsylvania, wring their hands this morning in imaginative anguish over the awful consequences menacing the American workingman at the end of this war in a threat of cheap goods in abundance to our people. But has either of them said a word regarding the pauper laborer himself, who may cross the seas in company with his pauper goods or without them? Is it not possible that we may be deluged with an army of pauper laborers whom our protected industries may thrust in the places of American workmen, and manufacture their pauper goods here for our protected magnates at starvation wages instead of making them over there and sending them to us? If we may judge by experience, that will be the situation. It is precisely what the protected industries want, precisely what they have at all times encouraged, the importation duty free into this country of thousands upon thousands of cheap laborers from their so-called pauper homes, through whose competition the American workman may be forced to accept reduced scale of wages as the alternative of starvation. No apprehension has thus far been expressed here concerning that contingency.

We know, Mr. President, that the class of laborers we fear may come from the older countries of the world, like many of those whose coming has preceded them, will not be desirable or wholesome, that their coming will reduce to a yet lower standard our scale of living and of civilization, and pushing the working class of this country harder and harder against the stern conditions which drastic competition for the necessities of life always produce.

So much, Mr. President, with regard to the improvidence or want of necessity of the passage of this measure for the reasons assigned. At bottom, Mr. President, the objection to it is that it continues a measure for direct taxation, and to the extent to which it raises revenue interferes with a return to unlimited protection, a system which has been justly condemned by enlightened public opinion.

It has been said that while our imports have not sensibly decreased, the duties which we have received for them have very sensibly decreased. Thank God for it. This simply means that the amount of the decrease for which we deliberately provided is that much saved to the consumers of the country. It was expected, it was designed, when we enacted the present revenue measure to produce those conditions, to increase imports and reduce revenues from them and place the needed surplus revenues upon wealth, where they belong.

Mr. President, we are raising money, and we will continue, I hope, to raise it by making the burden of taxes equal.

I want to remind my friends on the other side that but for the enactment of the Underwood law, but for the presence in that bill of an income-tax law, the amount of governmental deficiencies, had we been dependent upon the preexisting revenue law, would have been far greater than it is.

Mr. President, I shall say nothing whatever upon the deficiency itself at this time. That it exists no man can doubt. That it will continue until the revenue is replenished is an obvious situation which the party in power must meet and which, with the more courage and promptness it meets it, will be better for itself and for the country.

We hear much about preparedness in these days. I shall only refer to that subject now to express the view that preparedness to those dissatisfied with Democratic fiscal policies means about 75 per cent protection and about 20 per cent of profit hoped for from other public expenditures and about 5 per cent patriotism. Of course I am speaking generally.

Mr. President, if we are menaced by the possibility of war, if because of that menace it is the part of wisdom to make due and prompt preparation, then I want to see the men and the women who own the bulk of the property of this country, and which offers the temptation drawing hostile fleets and armies from across the seas, pay their proportion of the cost in full measure. Who own the millions of this country? There is, of course, a widespread degree of prosperity, property is somewhat distributed, but its great masses, the wealth of the Nation, are concentrated in the hands of a comparatively few individuals, interests, and corporations. It is they, Mr. President, whose apprehensions conjure up the specter of the coming invader, and it is upon that wealth, protected by the arms and the brains of the average citizen, which should bear the chief financial burden of the pending crisis.

I want to see direct taxes so graduated, Mr. President, that every man and woman, every corporation, and every interest, high and low, rich and poor, shall bear each his or its respective part of the burden, not a system 50 per cent of whose proceeds will reach the Treasury and the remainder the pockets of well-protected interests. In order to accomplish this, direct taxation is essential. I want to see the income tax increased progressively. I am willing to see a reduction in the amount of the exemption, and I want the great concerns which furnish the implements, the manufacturers of powder, of armor plate, of ships, of cannon, and of all the equipment that is necessary for the "pomp and circumstance of glorious war," however much the country will profit and prosper, required by a system of direct taxation to respond to what they declare to be the immediate and menacing financial need of the hour.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator if he has any hope, even remotely, of the enactment of such legislation as that?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, I have not much hope of enacting anything that can not command the unanimous consent of this body, and I have not any hope that such a measure will command its unanimous consent; but we can put every man on record upon the subject, and that I hope we will do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I want the Senator to understand that I am very much in sympathy with the purpose which he has declared, and I only wish that there were others who shared his broad and altruistic views.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, Mr. President, if war comes the Senator's son and mine must go into the ranks, submit to the rigors and hardships of the camp and the trenches, imperil their lives, and meet the shock of battle. Shall they be also required by a system of indirect and unwholesome taxation to bear the principal burden of the cost? Not, Mr. President, if it can be avoided; and the way to avoid it, Senators, is to stand by the Underwood bill, and provide an added system of direct taxation so graduated as that all interests will fairly respond to it. This should include provisions requiring the great munition-armor trust and supply plants, which expect to furnish our equipment to do so for a profit of not to exceed 6 per cent upon the cost of material and construction; failing to do which, let the Government of the United States, in this its hour of peril, reach forth its mighty arm and take possession of these great plants, operate them and manufacture at its own cost all that is essential to repel enemies, both real and imaginary, from our shores. That, Mr. President, may not be feasible, but it is justice, and, from my standpoint, it is Democracy.

My friend the Senator from Utah says that he is in favor of direct taxation only when it is equal. The Senator, however, is in favor of indirect taxation, which is unequal. You can not make it equal; it is impossible. Logically, the Senator is in favor of unequal taxation when it is indirect, because of his devotion to the protective theory. As suggested by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], it is impossible to make indirect taxation equal; that is true; and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] well suggests, if it were possible to do so, it would be undesirable and the most unpopular tax to the great interests of this country that could well be imagined.

Why, Mr. President, protection eo ipso means inequality. Why should I be protected against my neighbor from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] unless I can secure something of value that is denied to him? Protection! Why its inequalities and favoritism have spread over this country like an epidemic from which the Nation may never recover. What are your railway rebates but protection? What is the license given by the police to the violators of law and of decency in the great cities in our Nation but protection carried to its logical sequence? I do not, I never will, believe in it. And I will oppose its extension at all times and with all my heart.

I concede that the present measure is, in its operation, productive of some inequalities, perhaps a good many. I also concede that it is not a popular tax. With the exception of a tax levied upon a man and collected from him when he does not know it, because chloroformed by indirection, I never heard of a tax that was popular. I never knew a tax, with the possible exception of that to which the Senator is devoted, that was not evaded wherever possible. I think I can say with some degree of certainty, including myself in the category, that when we go to the assessor's office we take great pains to misrepresent our material condition. I do not hesitate to say that it is the custom in my country, and I am afraid that it is practically universal. And if my friend the Senator from Utah can in any way devise a system of taxation that is popular, that will not create resentments, he will confer a great boon upon humanity. My principal indictment against his favored system lies largely in the fact that it operates subconsciously and unconsciously and produces all of the evils and more of the inequalities than are possible in a system of direct taxation. So we propose, if we can—because we must—to continue this measure. If it can be supplemented by enlarging or restricting it, to the end that as much as possible of the revenue needed for present and future emergencies can be secured through its agency, that, to my mind, is the thing to be done.

When you tax a man and he knows it, when he has to "walk up to the captain's office," so to speak, and pay in coin to the collector, he is apt to take some interest in the methods and purposes of its expenditure; otherwise he is apt to be indifferent regarding it, and extravagance and corruption ensue.

Mr. President, at another time I shall occupy the attention of the Senate regarding the subject for which additional revenues must be raised and which is generally known as preparedness. It involves, as has well been said, the entire question of revenues and of expenditures. Meantime, I earnestly hope that my Republican brethren will get behind the Senator from Utah and that my Democratic brethren on this side of the Chamber will follow his good example in the effort to cut out every unneeded expenditure which in the aggregate now constitutes such an enormous drain upon the Public Treasury, and that when we run our eyes over this vast catalogue of personal bills already introduced and of other bills to follow for appropriations for nearly everything under the sun we try to forget politics for a while and subordinate them to the general pressing needs of the Treasury. I know, Mr. President, how difficult that is going to be; I know how your constituencies and mine will clamor for what they regard as their peculiar and overshadowing interests which should be excepted from the general rule of economies; but there must be a commencement somewhere.

For my part I earnestly hope that I may be able to practice what I preach and make as few exceptions to the rule as possible; but economy is possible only until and when constituencies and representatives join together in team work to bring it about.

The late leader of the Republican majority here declared some time ago that an adequate administrative scheme properly devised and enforced would annually save the country $300,000,000. I think there is no question about it, and unless something of that kind is done—I want to make a prediction, though I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet. This morning the Senator from Utah introduced figures showing that the total appropriations of the Sixty-second Congress were in excess of two billions—I am giving round figures—and that the total appropriations for the Sixty-third Congress were about $2,200,000,000. If in the providence of God, displeased with His people and desiring to inflict upon them a deplorable calamity, the next presidential election should be a Republican success and the Senator from Utah again assumes the leadership of the majority, I predict that the appropriations of the Sixty-fifth Congress will be greater than those of the Sixty-third Congress, not because his party will design it but because of the system, which is unbreakable, until a real start and a start altogether is made for real and genuine retrenchment.

Mr. President, I did not intend to detain the Senate so long as I have, and I now yield the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I merely wish a few moments to enter a protest against the passage of this joint resolution. I am opposed to it for two reasons: First, I am opposed to a war tax in time of peace; second, I am opposed to it because it would be unnecessary if the affairs of this Government were economically administered by this administration.

I was somewhat surprised at the reasons given for the passage of this joint resolution by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and I want to read his statement. He said:

> In October, 1914, when the Congress enacted the present emergency law, we were in the midst, as we are now, of a war.

Mr. President, I deny that statement; we are not in the midst of war; the United States is at peace with the world.

Second, the chairman of the Finance Committee said:

> And as the result of the curtailment of imports following the reduction which had been made in duties, together with the almost certainty that there would be increases in expenditures incident to the war, the Treasury Department estimated that there would probably be a lacking in funds of something over $100,000,000 if the falling off which had been indicated by the few months between that period and the outbreak of the war continued.

I wonder why the chairman could not be fair with the Senate and state how much has been lost because of the falling off in collections from customs? The report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee in the other House gives these illuminating figures in answer to that question:

> The receipts from customs for this fiscal year to December 9, 1915, were $86,259,626.28, as compared with $96,610,506.45 for a like war period last year, thus indicating a continuing decline in this source of revenue.

This shows in the period indicated a decrease in customs revenues, according to the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House, of only $10,000,000 in round numbers.

The decrease in internal revenue for the same period was only $11,000,000, so, according to that report, you have a falling off of $21,000,000 in all; and yet the chairman of the committee says that over $100,000,000 are needed.

If the Senate please, I desire to call their attention to the fact that in 1912, when there was appropriated for the year 1913 the sum of $967,123,359, the Democratic convention met and passed this resolution:

> We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation through the lavish appropriations of recent Republican Congresses, which have kept taxes high and reduced the purchasing power of the people's toil. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a Democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless offices, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

Yet the very next session of Congress, under the Democratic administration, appropriated, not $900,000,000 but $1,053,000,000; the next session of Congress, $1,116,000,000; the next, $1,114,000,000; and the estimates for next year amount to $1,285,000,000. That shows why the money is needed—not because of the loss of $10,000,000 collected from customs, not because of the $11,000,000 lost in the collection of internal revenue, but because of the enormous expense of this Government under the administration that condemned the Republican Party some three years ago. You have asked for the next fiscal year $318,734,449 more than was appropriated by the Congress you condemned.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to an extract from the message of the President. He said:

> Assuming that the taxes imposed by the emergency revenue act and the present duty on sugar are to be discontinued, and that the balance at the close of the present fiscal year will be only $20,644,605.78, that the disbursements for the Panama Canal will again be about twenty-five millions, and that the additional expenditures for the Army and Navy are authorized by the Congress, the deficit in the general fund of the Treasury on the 30th of June, 1917, will be nearly two hundred and thirty-five millions. To this sum at least fifty millions should be added to represent a safe working balance for the Treasury, and twelve millions to include the usual deficiency estimates in 1917; and these additions would make a total deficit of some two hundred and ninety-seven millions.

That is the additional amount we are asked to provide when the revenues have been decreased only $21,000,000, according to the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. I say again that with a proper administration of the affairs of this Government not another dollar would be needed, and if extravagance were eliminated this joint resolution would be unnecessary.

I want to say, although I dislike very much to oppose the amendment that is going to be proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], that, so far as I am concerned, I shall vote against the continuation of this infamous tax for any period of time. I am opposed to it because it is wrong, it is unjust, it is unnecessary, and, that the record may be straight, I want to say here and now that I am not only opposed to a war tax in time of peace, but I am opposed to the issuing of bonds in time of peace.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, assuming that it will be necessary later to have some general legislation with a view of furnishing proper revenues to the Treasury, I shall reserve any discussion of systems of taxation which I desire to enter into until that time. Perhaps my assumption is a hasty one. It may be that we shall go on borrowing money to pay our current expenditures, which was what was done under the last Democratic administration; but, in view of what the President has said, in view of what the chairman of the Finance Committee has said, I think it is only civil to assume that something will be done toward supplying the Government with the absolutely necessary revenue. Therefore I shall occupy only a few moments in what I have to say about this joint resolution.

I think the law which it is proposed to extend, the law imposing emergency taxes, is a bad measure from the point of view of those who believe in direct taxation. I think it is also a bad measure on general principles. That law was constructed on the basis of getting money by taxes which would cause the least alienation of votes. That is a doctrine which appeals to every right-feeling man, of course, but as an economic system it leaves something to be desired. I suppose also it may be termed altruistic, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] has applied that excellent word to the thoroughly sound idea of taking taxes out of somebody else and from some other part of the country than your own, but neither of those ideas seems to me to be a sound economic proposition. If we are going to have direct taxes, they ought to be laid with some reference to the principles which should govern all taxation, ease and certainty of collection among others, and if we are anxious to have everyone appreciate them, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] desires so earnestly, I think it would be well to arrange them so that they would not all fall on one part of the country. Perhaps the part of the country that is relieved by this Democratic system of taxation will not realize very vividly how much money is being spent, and, according to the doctrine of the Senator from Colorado, it is desirable that everybody should realize how much money is being spent by the Government. In that I quite agree with him; but, Mr. President, this whole system, from my point of view, is unsound. I am not entering at all on the question of protection or free trade, the two economic doctrines; I am speaking simply from the point of view of taxation.

The Constitution gives to the National Government the exclusive control of that great field of taxation known as import duties. It excludes the States from that same field; and I think one of the intentions of the framers of the Constitution, when they gave that entire field, as it was necessary they should, to the National Government, was to leave the other fields of taxation as far as possible to the State governments. Putting it solely on the ground of taxation, considering merely the question of raising money by taxes, here is this great field of taxation entirely abandoned, and the National Government carried into the field of direct taxation, where it comes in immediate collision with all the States and cities.

I am perfectly aware of the fundamental objection in the Democratic mind to any duties on imports, and that is the underlying fear that that duty on imports may give an advantage to some American producer. I know that duties, whether for revenue or whether embracing the idea of protection also, are objectionable to the Democratic Party because they suggest that some American producer is going to make money, and they have a well-founded belief that any man who is successful in business and makes money commits a crime. They start on that general proposition; but, laying that aside, and looking only at the tax, at the mere raising of revenue, they have deliberately thrown away great sources of revenue, such as the sugar duty, which is certain of collection, which is enormous in amount, and which is felt as little as any tax can be felt upon an article. In the case of sugar there has been substantially no advance in the price in recent years, and the duty distributes itself, on the whole, very fairly in proportion to the wealth of the persons paying it. Half of that was thrown over in the tariff law and the other half is to go in May, according to the original plan. Now they are obliged to retain it. That is only one of many things. There are innumerable articles that come in to our ports and on which a tax could be imposed. I am not speaking of a protective duty, but of a revenue-raising tax which would be felt but slightly, which would be well distributed, easily and certainly collected, and paid by the whole country. Instead of that, they substitute for it taxes like this, harassing to business, interfering with trade, taxes which ought not to be resorted to except under the stress of war or some great demand of that kind, and which are put on when the whole field, or practically a large part of the field, of import duties is abandoned and left unoccupied.

I only desired to point out very briefly the absolute and total unsoundness of the method of raising revenue embodied in such bills as the one which we are now asked to renew, when we can get all the revenue we require in other more reasonable and less oppressive ways. And if getting it in other and less oppressive ways is also a benefit to American industry, I am so constituted that I can not see anything very vicious in that.

We are asked to renew this legislation for a year. I think it would be much better to renew it for a shorter period, so that we could judge the whole of the system of taxation which it will be necessary to impose, and judge it once and judge it comprehensively.

I shall therefore vote for the amendment of the Senator from Utah, and I shall vote against this joint resolution because I do not believe it is a sound method of raising revenues, and they can be easily raised in other ways.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if the passage of this resolution would preclude the Congress from limiting it later? If we should enact general legislation, could not this resolution be repealed or set aside?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So the passage of this resolution would not bind the Congress in any way to the continuation of this law for another year, would it?

Mr. LODGE. It would not prevent our repealing it, of course, nor would it prevent extending it. I assume, however, from the fact of its being put on for a year, that it is the intention of those responsible for the Government to keep it in operation during that time. I think it ought to be revised when the other and additional forms of taxation are taken up; and I much regret that it should not have been left so that when the question of the repeal of the act removing the sugar duties is taken up, as it will have to be, this could be taken up, too, and could be considered either by the Committee on Finance, the recognized and official organ of the Senate, or by the Democratic caucus, the unrecognized and unofficial organ of the Senate. I regret that they could not consider it all together and have some coherent plan, instead of having a parcel of taxes like these, which, as I recall the mode of their imposition, were put on here and taken off there and put back there, according as the shriek rose loudest from those who would have to pay the tax. I hope when we do come to it that we shall leave the alienation of votes a little more in the background and try to get a better system of taxation.

In the meantime, however, I merely wish at this moment, so that my silence may not be misunderstood, to have it appear in the RECORD that I am opposed to this whole system of substitution of direct taxation, oppressive, harassing, and troublesome to business throughout the world, instead of a system of indirect taxation much less oppressive and much more certain to raise revenue.

I ask to print with what I have said the statement of the views of the minority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which puts most admirably some of the points and details which I should like to have appear in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

The majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means, by unanimous vote, report back to the House this resolution (H. J. Res. 59), which provides for the extension of the emergency revenue law for one year after December 31, 1915, without amendment, and recommend that it do pass.

The necessity for this resolution assigned by the majority members in their favorable report is, in part, as follows:

"Section 24 of the emergency revenue act of October 22, 1914, provides 'that on the day after the 31st day of December, 1915, the taxes levied under this act shall no longer be levied and collected, but all taxes arising or accruing before said date shall continue to be collectible under the terms of this act.' This act was enacted as an emergency measure to cover the reduction of revenue due mainly to the loss of customs receipts caused by the disturbed conditions resulting from the war in Europe. At the time the law was enacted it was thought that the European war would probably not be of longer duration than January 1, 1916, and that there would be no necessity for this additional taxation beyond that date, but the end of the war is still beyond sight and the Treasury will need the additional revenue contemplated by the extension of the act."

They then set forth a table comparing total imports and customs receipts for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1914, and June 30, 1915.

We, the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, agree with the majority that the Treasury of the United States is in a distressing condition, and that additional revenues must be raised to meet the current expenses of the Government. We deny the statement of the majority that the necessity for an emergency revenue law is due mainly to conditions resulting from the war in Europe, and we assert that the deficit is due mainly to reduced rates of duty on imports provided for in the Underwood Tariff Act.

On September 4, 1914, when the President of the United States delivered his message to Congress urging the immediate enactment of additional revenue legislation, he compared customs receipts for the month of August, 1913, when the Payne Tariff Act was in effect, with the month of August, 1914, when the Underwood Tariff Act was in effect, and showed a loss in customs receipts of some $10,000,000. However, during the eight months preceding the war in Europe customs receipts averaged but $22,200,000 per month, while the month of August, 1913, produced $30,934,952. The loss in customs receipts was, therefore, very evident prior to the war in Europe.

Contrary to the impression conveyed by the majority report, imports at this time are not below normal. Imports for the eight months ended November 1, 1915, amount to $1,203,452,698, an increase of $56,000,000 over the corresponding eight months of 1913, when adequate customs receipts were being collected by the Government. In the table presented by the majority imports for the recent months are ignored completely. During this eight-month period, showing an increase of imports of $56,000,000, the customs revenue receipts have declined to the extent of $77,000,000. The average ad valorem rate of duty collected on imports during the 1913 period was 18.4 per cent, and during the 1915 period it was 11.1 per cent. This is due to the change in revenue laws and not the war in Europe. It is interesting and instructive to compare importations and customs receipts for the month of August, 1913 (the month on which the President based his calculations showing the necessity of additional revenue), with the month of August, 1915.

Imports, August, 1913	$137,651,553
Imports, August, 1915	141,804,202
Gain in imports	4,152,649
Customs receipts, August, 1913	30,934,952
Customs receipts, August, 1915	15,780,540
Loss in revenue	15,154,412

The majority members in their report point to the decreasing percentage of total imports that are dutiable and infer that it is due to the European war. They compare the fiscal year of 1914 (which is partly under the Payne Tariff Act) with the fiscal year of 1915 (entirely under the Underwood Tariff Act). In fairness it should be stated that many imports which were on the dutiable list during a portion of the fiscal year of 1914 were on the free list during the fiscal year of 1915. The following is a partial list of imports on the free list during the nine months ending October 1, 1915, which were on the dutiable list under the Payne Tariff Act:

Food animals	$12,189,000
Corn	2,731,000
Bituminous coal	3,092,000
Flax	2,192,000
Fish	6,661,000
Beef and veal	7,892,000
Milk and cream	2,650,000
Lumber, lath, and shingles	17,245,000
Wool	68,016,000
Total	127,157,000

The majority report shows a loss in dutiable imports during the fiscal year of 1915, compared with the fiscal year of 1914, amounting to $125,779,000. It is unfair to make no mention of the large quantities of imports formerly on the dutiable list which are now on the free list, which is the chief cause for the decline of dutiable imports.

We assert that the direct taxes levied in the emergency revenue law are burdensome and uncalled for, that the necessary revenue can be raised by means of an adequate tariff law, and that the Underwood tariff law has failed completely, both as a producer of revenue and a means of fostering American industries. Further, we assert that the party in power is concealing the fact that imports are in an almost normal condition at the present time, and that they are using the war in Europe as a cloak to cover the inefficiency of existing revenue laws. Further, that had the party in power lived up to its pledge of economy, solemnly made at Baltimore, the necessity for the proposed legislation, or that for which it is to be an extension, burdensome as it has been and will be upon the people, would not have arisen.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I would not occupy the time of the Senate now in discussing the pending measure, which I assume will be enacted into law, and the necessity for the enactment of which is apparent to everyone, if it were not for the fact that a challenge has been given that the present revenue laws were incapable of producing the revenue necessary to run the Government at the time of their enactment. No man is wise enough, no man can see so far into the future when he enacts revenue legislation, as to determine with certainty what effect subsequent events will have on the legislation if it becomes the law of the land; and, therefore, in the eyes of an intelligent public, it is not necessary to defend present conditions, which no man could foresee a week before the war in Europe began.

But it is a very proper challenge to a great party's ability to run the affairs of a Government if it could be truthfully and fairly stated that in their efforts to produce the revenues necessary to take care of the Government's finances they were incapable of writing effective legislation; and, as one of the authors of the law which is now on the statute books, I feel that I would not properly represent my constituency if I remained silent at this time, when the fact is challenged as to the ability of the present law to produce the revenue necessary to run the Government at the time it was placed on the statute books.

The country should bear in mind that when the present revenue system was inaugurated, the ordinary expenditures of the Government for that fiscal year (1912) amounted to $654,553,963. Every year since that time the exigencies of the Government have required increased expenditures, until to-day it is estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury that for the next fiscal year (1916) the ordinary expenditures of the Government, exclusive of any additional preparedness for war purposes, will amount to $741,891,000 or $87,337,037 in excess of the ordinary expenditures of the Government the year the present revenue law was enacted.

It is not necessary at this time to discuss whether those expenditures have been wisely made or not. They have been made by the representatives of the American people, and there has been but little criticism in the public press or by the people of the country of the additional moneys that have been expended. If you should take the roll calls of this body and the roll calls of the House at the other end of the Capitol, and compare the votes on that side of the Chamber with the votes on this side of the Chamber when the legislation was enacted into law that increased expenditures, I think it would be shown that the percentage of votes on that side of the Chamber for the new legislation was equally as great as, if not greater than, the percentage of votes in favor of it on this side of the Chamber.

It matters not what sum is carried in an appropriation bill, when you put laws on the statute books providing for building new railroads in Alaska, the creation of a Federal Reserve Bank System, or other expenditures for public improvements, the additional cost must be met. If you assist by your votes in enacting laws which require the expenditure of money, you must stand responsible for the increased expenditures, or be willing to confess that you voted for legislation in order to embarrass your political opponents.

I say that the expenditures of the Government to-day have very greatly increased over what the expenditures of the Government were when the existing fiscal legislation was written; that it was written to meet the expenditures of the Government in 1913, not for the fiscal year 1916.

But it is claimed that even for the year 1913 the revenues produced were not sufficient to take care of the Government's expenditures. There never was a claim made in this body that was so little justified by the facts as that statement. There can be no question as to what the facts are, because they are disclosed in the governmental reports that are furnished to all of us. I do not refer to the receipts of the Post Office Department and the expenditures of the Post Office Department, because the receipts of the Post Office Department are expected to take care of the expenditures of that branch of the Government; and in recent years they have, in the main, done so. It was assumed at the time the present law was written that postal receipts would take care of postal expenditures, and I believe that can be assumed to be a fact to-day and for the immediate future. But counting all other receipts as ordinary receipts, we find that the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury show that all ordinary receipts for the fiscal year 1912 amounted to $691,778,465; for the fiscal year 1913, to $724,111,229; and for the fiscal year 1914, the first year that the present revenue law was on the statute books, to $734,343,700.

In other words, Mr. President, comparing the last year that the Payne law was on the statute books with the first year after the present law was enacted, counting all ordinary receipts—and, mark you, the law was the same as to the collection of taxes except where the present law modified the Payne tariff law—there was an increase of $10,232,471 in revenue collected under the present law as compared with that collected under the Payne law the last year it was on the statute books, and $43,565,235 more revenue than was produced under the Payne law in 1912.

The difference in the law is the change of taxes levied at the customhouse on imports, and the writing of an income tax in place of the corporation tax which was placed in the Payne bill. I challenge any man on the floor of the Senate, or outside of it, to deny the facts that I have just stated.

But, you say: "The Payne tariff law produced more revenue at the customhouse than the present law." Undoubtedly it did. It was the intention of the men who wrote the new law to decrease the taxes that were raised from consumption and to inaugurate in this country a system of taxing wealth in place of taxing individuals. That decrease, however, was not so great as some would have us believe.

The receipts at the customhouse for 1912 amounted to $311,321,672. In 1913, the last year of the Payne law, the customs receipts amounted to $318,891,395; and in 1914, the first year of the present law, the receipts at the customhouse amounted to $292,128,527. In other words, the falling off of receipts at the customhouse, comparing 1914, the first year of the present law, with 1912, was only $19,193,045; and comparing it with 1913, the last year of the Payne law, it was $26,762,868. You can not dispute the facts.

The point before the European war began where there was the greatest difference in receipts at the customhouse between the present law and the Payne law was the fiscal year 1913, when it amounted to $26,762,868. And yet, notwithstanding the decrease from customs, our legislation increased the amount collected under the corporation tax by extending the scope of the law to all corporations and by the enactment of the existing income-tax law.

What is the result? You charge us with an inability to produce the necessary revenue at the customhouse to take care of the expenditures of the Government. There is only one place where that revenue could fall off, or has fallen off, that may be chargeable to our legislation, and that is at the customhouse. We admit, and the record shows, that we collected $26,000,000 less at the customhouse than you collected the last year the Payne law was on the statute books. But the record also shows that you collected only $35,006,299 under your corporation tax, and we, with our amendments, made it produce $39,144,531, a gain of over $4,000,000 to the Treasury; that we wrote a new law that has collected $41,046,162 from individual incomes, thereby increasing the revenues collected from the increase on the corporation tax and from individual incomes by over $45,000,000 as against a loss at the customhouse of $26,000,000, or a net gain of revenue in favor of existing law of over $19,000,000.

Is there any other place where revenues have fallen off that can be charged to legislation coming from this side of the Chamber? If you say the receipts from internal-revenue taxation have fallen off, I answer you by asking who wrote the laws, who is chargeable with the responsibility for the laws, to collecting internal-revenue taxation at that time? Your side of the Chamber; not ours.

Then what is there in this charge you make? Oh, you may say that I am talking about the fiscal year 1914, and the Payne law was on the statute books from the 1st of July to the 13th day of October of that year. Well, that is true; and you may go further than that. You may say that the wool schedule in the present law did not take effect until the 1st day of January, 1914. That is true. Then let us compare the status of the Treasury under these two laws from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of August, the day on which war was declared in Europe, and you find that from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, the total revenues collected were $456,798,552. That was under the present law. From the 1st day of January, 1913, to the 1st day of August, 1913, the revenues collected were $429,558,425. That was under the Payne law. The excess collections in favor of the present law during that period of time amounted to $27,240,127.

It is manifestly fair to compare the last year of the Payne law with the first year of the present law in determining the revenue power of each law.

I might go much further in making the comparison, and if at a later day it is necessary to do so I will put a full and complete comparison of these two laws in the RECORD. I am ready now and at all times to challenge the statement of anyone who disputes the facts I have stated or who attempts to show that the Republican revenue laws produced more revenue than the Democratic revenue laws produced before the great debâcle took place in all of Europe.

Mr. President, it has always been charged by the leaders of the Republican party that the lowering of taxes at the customhouses meant the increase of importations; and it ought to result in the increase of importations when you lower the tariff on many articles that were taxed under Republican laws, because you levied your taxes for monopoly, you levied your taxes to exact burdensome profits from the American consumer, you built your walls of taxation for the deliberate purpose of preventing competition, and at times you built those walls so high that there were practically no importations that came into the country at all.

When the present tariff laws were written your tax walls were so high in the iron and steel schedule that the importations amounted to not more than 1 per cent of American consumption. If my memory serves me right, in the cotton schedule your tax law was so high that the importations amounted to but little more than 2 per cent of American consumption.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not desire to address an inquiry to the Senator if it interrupts the continuity of his remarks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. I shall be glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. PENROSE. I merely wanted to call attention, under the duties which are in the tariff law, to the results in Pennsylvania and to cite a few striking instances. The Baldwin Locomotive Works, which had been employing 20,000 men for a number of years, were employing only 4,000 or 5,000 men. The Reading Iron Works, which had been employing 10,000 or 15,000 men, when I was in Reading during my campaign for reelection were employing 2,000 or 3,000 men. The day I was in Reading I went to a neighboring town. The Thomas Iron Works were shut down for the first time in 60 years, and I remember a crowd of the wives of the employees there came and implored me to do all I could to secure legislation to open those works and keep their families from starvation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; in one moment. Not one of the concerns I refer to was in any combination or in any trust. Many of them were small independent concerns, and all of them operating in a beneficial way in their neighborhoods.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question while he is on his feet?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. So that we may fairly understand each other. I come from a great iron and steel district, and know something about industrial conditions in the country. You claim, theoretically at least, that a Republican tariff law helps the iron and steel industry or other industries, because it keeps out undue competition from abroad. Is not that your theory?

Mr. PENROSE. No. As a matter of fact the duties in the metal schedule have been steadily reduced for the last 20 or 30 years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand.

Mr. PENROSE. In the Payne bill they were lower than they ever had been in the history of any tariff act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the Senator does not think that the iron and steel industry is injured by importations from abroad?

Mr. PENROSE. The argument is frequently made that the result of Republican protection is to stop competition. That is an argument made in campaigns but it does not exist in fact. Under a protective law three-quarters of the structural iron and steel used in the rebuilding of San Francisco came from Germany, having been brought there in vessels, and a number of notable buildings were constructed in New York, such as the Singer Building, by steel of German fabrication, showing that there was competition.

To state that the result of the Payne law or any other Republican protective law was to abolish competition is simply to conjure up a great octopus which only exists in the imagination of a Democratic orator when he is out of office during a campaign.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the Senator does not answer my question.

Mr. PENROSE. If I have not done so, I will try to answer it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to know whether the Senator contends that the importation of goods into this country from abroad injures American industry or does not injure American industry.

Mr. PENROSE. If it comes in unduly, so that the American establishments are reduced to pay the wages of the cheap labor of Europe, it is not only an injury to the employer, but an injury to the employee and the destruction of American industry.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is what I understood the Senator's position to be. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that during the time he has spoken of, under the present law, when industries were out of commission in his State, the imports in the iron and steel schedule, all along the line, were less than they had been under the Payne law. Therefore, idle mills and idle foundries could not have been caused by increased competition or the enactment of the Democratic tariff law.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Theories are very fine and figures can be presented to prove almost anything. There is only one test of success of a party or a government or an economic policy and that is whether prosperity attends it or whether the contrary is the result. All I can say is that we were rapidly reaching a point under the present law in Pennsylvania and Ohio and New England and every other place to which attention was called, when the greatest misery and destitution prevailed, where men were tramping the highways by hundreds and thousands with all their little belongings on the end of a stick, and sleeping under fences, hunting employment, six months after the passage of this law, where six months before its enactment employers had been hunting up and down through every part of Pennsylvania and other States endeavoring to procure unskilled labor and give large compensation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question right there?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator admits, because I take it, it is a fact, that the importation of goods from abroad did not put these industries out of blast because the importations did not come in, but he says that industrial depression existed in his State and that the party in power should not be entrusted with the Government, because it is responsible for the industrial conditions of a year ago but how, if increased imports did not effect our industries?

I ask him now if the Baldwin Locomotive Works are out of blast or if they are not making a greater profit at their factory than they ever did in their existence?

Mr. PENROSE. There is no doubt, Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And if the other great iron and steel industries in Pennsylvania are not running their output to the limit to-day and employing every available man? Is not that a fact?

Mr. PENROSE. That is almost entirely due to the so-called war orders. It is looked on as a transient, meretricious prosperity. I see that the Senator from Alabama looks on these things as psychological, but unfortunately the psychology of a starving man is to be reckoned with.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator says the present prosperity that exists in his State and mine in the great iron and steel industry is due to the war. I admit that to some extent it may be due to the war. I am not foolish enough to claim that legislation enacted by Congress has produced the results that exist to-day, but I do think when gentlemen on the other side say that the growing prosperity in America to-day to a large extent may be attributed to the war conditions, it is but just and fair for them to admit that war conditions that came on in the first part of this administration were entirely responsible for the depressed times that the country had to face.

The Senator from Pennsylvania, a man of splendid executive ability and business sagacity, knows full well that when war was declared in Europe it paralyzed credit, it destroyed confidence, the New York Stock Exchange was closed, business men feared that millions of American securities would be dumped on the American market by European holders, development ceased, and business was paralyzed, due entirely to war conditions in Europe and lack of business confidence at home. It can be only a political subterfuge to charge it is due to any other cause. In one great section of this country it reduced the price of its crops far below the cost of production. This condition of business not only happened in the United States but in every neutral country in the world. Gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber would charge to the great party in power the responsibility for those evil times that came about by conditions over which they had no control. And yet when the cornucopia of plenty is poured forth in their States and in their country they would hide behind the excuse that it came not from the party in power, it came not from legislation on the statute books, but was the result of the war in Europe. I say, gentlemen, that when we approach the country on this question we can afford to be fair on both sides of it.

I wish to say, in justification of the bill now under consideration, that the receipts from customs for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914, were $298,913,000; for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1915, the receipts from customs were $212,146,000, resulting in a loss in customs receipts of $86,766,000. There was no change of law in the meantime to change results, but factory hands had gone to the trenches in Europe, and the seas had been closed to great nations who were large exporters to our country before present war conditions arose to disturb our customs revenues.

In addition to the loss of revenue at the customhouses there has been a falling off of internal-revenue receipts that heretofore have been collected on whisky and fermented liquors to the amount of $25,000,000. Your party wrote the internal-revenue laws of our country. It is your legislation. Is it due to your legislation or our legislation that the receipts from liquor fell off $25,000,000 last year? It is due to conditions in the United States, conditions that were in no way brought about by fiscal legislation, and you know it. You know that it is not fair, it is not just, to charge those conditions against the party in power which had no more control over them than you had.

Mr. President, I think the discussion that has taken place here this afternoon, although it may not have been very illuminating on the question of finance and of the fiscal conditions of the Government, has clearly defined one thing, and that is the issue which exists between the two great parties in this country on the question of levying taxation. The distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], whose eminent ability, long service, and commanding character entitle him to speak for his party, declared that we are committing an error against the American people to withdraw taxes levied at the customhouse that must fall and be collected per capita throughout the Union, and put in their place taxation that rests solely upon the wealth of the country. He said:

> This whole system, from my point of view, is unsound. I am not entering at all on the question of protection or free trade, the two economic doctrines; I am speaking simply from the point of view of taxation. The Constitution gives the National Government the exclusive control of that great field of taxation known as import duties. It excludes the States from the same field; and I think one of the intentions of the framers of the Constitution when they gave that entire field, as it was necessary they should, to the National Government, was to leave the other fields of taxation as far as possible to the State governments.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has challenged this side of the Chamber for enacting legislation that taxes wealth; and, indeed, he is correct in his challenge. When the present fiscal legislation was written, the Democratic Party in the House of Representatives, where the legislation was inaugurated, reduced taxation at the customhouse deliberately for the purpose of making room in our fiscal system for a tax on wealth. As the chairman of the committee which reported that bill and as the spokesman of my party at that time, I wish to say to you and the country that that change of system was not haphazard; it was not written to meet revenue exigencies; it was done with great deliberation, because the party that I then had the honor to represent on the floor of the House believed that it was only just to the great body of the American people that at least a portion of the burdens of this great Government should be borne by the wealth of the country as well as by the toiling masses.

It has been said here this afternoon on the other side of the Chamber that a tax on sugar is distributed in proportion to a man's wealth. I have never known just the time when a very rich man could consume more sugar individually than a very poor man. There is not a man in this Chamber who can sustain such a proposition. The statistics printed in reference to that industry and as to all other taxation that is levied indirectly on consumption show that taxation levied on consumption does not fall in proportion to wealth, but that its burdens rest in proportion to numbers. I am not one of those who would decry wealth, or who would tear down the great industries of our country.

I am proud of the great industrial growth of America. There may be some men in the country who have not been fair and honest in the way they have acquired wealth, but I am ready to believe that the great number of American citizens who have been successful and acquired the wealth of our country have done so in honest dealing and by legitimate toil, and I for one am ready at all times to recognize it. I for one stand ready at all times to protect their property by the strong arm of the law, because when you fail to protect the property of our country you pull from under it the prop that sustains our civilization. But I know and you know that the great wealth of this country receives far greater protection from the Government of the United States than does the man who toils each day for his daily bread. When you levy your taxation at the customhouse on consumption you levy it per capita, and you make the man who toils for his daily bread bear approximately the same burden as the man who counts his wealth in the millions. But when you collect your revenue through an income tax you say, he that hath shall be the man who shall pay; and you say further that the Government of the United States with its strong arm protects the property of the rich and protects the property of the strong, that it is but just, it is but fair, and it is but right, that the great wealth of this country which receives that protection should at least pay a fair proportionate share of the taxes which are necessary to sustain and maintain this great Government of ours.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not propose at this late hour to take the time of the Senate in entering into a general discussion of the tariff question. I do, however, wish as briefly as I possibly can to give some facts which are based upon the reports made by the various departments during the time this administration has been in power. I hope at some time in the near future to be able to give my views or my conclusions as to which will be the proper policy from a Republican standpoint.

Mr. President, the Republican Members of the Senate have no desire to delay the passage of this resolution. We realize that while there are many serious objections to the law which this resolution continues in force it is necessary to continue to raise, in some manner or other, the revenue at present collected under the emergency revenue act, and that unless this act is continued in force the interval which would necessarily occur between the day on which this act expires and the enactment of another revenue measure would, besides resulting in a loss of revenue, result in serious confusion in the transaction of much of our business.

I deem it proper to state at this time, however, that it is my conviction that the necessity for the imposition of taxes like these—some of which bear heavily and unequally on certain members of each community—arises from the mistaken fiscal policy of the present administration. In former years we have found it possible to raise the revenue necessary for the support of the Government in time of peace without imposing taxes on many of the common transactions of life in the manner this act does.

This administration came into power pledged to a program of economy, which, it was stated, would reduce the appropriations far below what they had been under Republican administrations. Yet the expenditures of this administration have been greater than under any administration since the Civil War. And there is no apparent reason why they should have been. The Government has not in the last three years been called upon to shoulder any burdens that it did not carry during the preceding administrations. And yet the expenditures during the first year of this administration were greater than those of the preceding year, and they have kept on increasing with each succeeding year.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury gives the ordinary receipts for the fiscal year ended last June, disregarding the postal receipts, as almost $698,000,000. This has been exceeded only three times in our history—in 1911, 1913, and 1914. And yet, according to the Secretary's report, there was a deficit on ordinary receipts of more than $33,000,000. The ordinary receipts for the fiscal year 1912 were about $6,000,000 less than for 1915. Yet in that year we had a surplus, again according to the figures of Secretary McAdoo, of more than $37,000,000. And if we go back a few years we find that in the year ended June 30, 1907, when the ordinary receipts were $663,000,000, we had a surplus of more than $111,000,000.

The figures I have been discussing include only what are termed the ordinary receipts and disbursements. If we include the postal receipts and the postal and Panama Canal expenditures, the receipts for last year will in round numbers be $990,400,000 and the disbursements $1,047,800,000, resulting in a deficit of more than $57,000,000.

Of the revenue collected during the fiscal year ended last June, more than $52,000,000 was collected under the emergency revenue law, which we are now called upon to extend by this resolution. The income tax brought in $41,000,000 and the corporation tax somewhat more than $39,000,000. The customs collections, however, were only $209,786,672. The customs collections under the Payne tariff law the second year it was in force totaled $333,683,445, and the last full year this law was in force, 1913, the collections amounted to $318,891,395. As a revenue producer, therefore, the Underwood tariff falls more than $100,000,000 short of the amount produced by its predecessor.

It is often urged that the war in Europe is responsible for the failure of the Underwood Act to produce the needed revenues. While it is possible that our revenue from the tariff might have been somewhat greater if there had been no war, the main reason must be looked for elsewhere. Our imports during this war have not fallen off to the extent that many persons appear to believe. During the first nine months of the calendar year 1913 our total imports were valued at $1,327,000,000; for the same period in 1914, during two of which months war existed, they totaled $1,410,000,000; and during the same nine months in 1915 their total value was $1,302,000,000, or only $25,000,000 less than for the same period in 1913. But while in 1913 we collected for the nine months duties amounting to $242,624,000, in 1915 the duties collected totaled only $148,225,000, or almost $100,000,000 less.

I shall not at this time discuss the failure of the tariff bill to reduce the cost of living, nor the unstable character of the prosperity which a certain class of papers is at present so busy advertising, but I believe it proper to call attention to the fact that the deficit in our revenues should not be attributed to the war, but must be charged to the defect in legislation which reduced our revenue from tariff duties without making adequate provision for raising from other sources the revenues required. I do not believe a bill of this kind, extending taxes which should be imposed only in case of war or other emergencies, should be passed without calling attention to the facts which make its enactment necessary.

Mr. President, I do not care further to delay the Senate. I simply want to add that I shall vote against the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, my purpose in rising is more to secure information than to impart it. I think we have discussed the figures relating to this proposition quite thoroughly. I should like to ascertain something of the purpose of the administration. I know of no one to whom I can better turn for such information than to the chairman of the Committee on Finance. Whether or not there should be amendments offered to this proposition depends to a great extent upon the purpose of the administration or those who represent the administration as to the length of time this provision is intended to be enforced.

I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the fact that in the joint resolution itself, while it provides for the continuation of this method of taxation until December 31, 1916, in the second section of the same joint resolution provision for the added salaries and necessary expenses of carrying this proposed law into effect is continued only until the 30th day of June next. There is that which indicates the purpose of the framers of this joint resolution, or a possible purpose at least, to revise this whole matter before the 30th day of June. We shall have to make provision between this and that date for a general law affecting the finances for the fiscal year of 1917. If this portion of the joint resolution, this little piece of legislation, is to be continued until December, and then possibly continued for another year, we ought to know it. If it is the purpose to have a general bill, which we may amend and may discuss before the end of this fiscal year, which will take the place of the provisions of this joint resolution, we ought to have some information on it. On the other hand, if it is the purpose of the administration and the purpose of those who represent it on the other side of the Chamber to continue this special method of taxation until December, 1916, until after the November elections, and to sell Panama bonds, for instance, to meet the deficit between that time and December, the public ought to know it now, and Congress ought to know it now.

I do not know to just what extent the rules with reference to these running debates are going to be rigidly or liberally enforced. There has been an indication in the last week or two of forcing out entirely the ordinary running debate of questions and answers. I would, therefore, fearful that I might not be able to obtain the floor for a further question, be highly gratified if the Senator having this measure in charge, and the Senator who will have all of like measures in charge, will, with his usual candor, inform the Senate and inform the country whether or not the real present intention of his party is to continue this provision without amendment until the 31st of December next or whether they intend to provide for an additional emergency taxation measure or whether they intend to let this run until December 31, 1916, to have no general law of taxation, and to issue bonds, if that be necessary.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course it would be impossible for me to answer the questions of the Senator categorically. The Senator knows that in our form of government there is nobody who absolutely controls the course of legislation. I can speak only for myself and express my own opinion. In doing that, I want to say that I know of no formal understanding anywhere about the subject. I speak, therefore, not from a formal understanding with the majority members of the Finance Committee or persons representing the administration, for there has been no formal understanding about it, so far as I know. What I know about it I have gathered from conversations with Members of the other House representing the administration and Democratic Senators, especially those on the Finance Committee.

It is my understanding that it is the purpose of the Democratic Party, at some time after the holiday recess has expired, to take this matter up and pass additional legislation providing for the raising of additional necessary revenue. I could not indicate to the Senator exactly when that program will be entered upon. Something might depend upon the developments with respect to preparedness.

If it should be clear and unmistakable that we are going to carry out the program of the President as outlined in his message and the recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy as outlined in his report to Congress, that would require the raising of additional revenue, but the exact amount of additional revenue that we will have to raise by some supplementary legislation is not altogether certain at this time. It is dependent upon things that are expected to happen, but may not happen. In any circumstances, however, I think, as I indicated in my opening statement to-day, that it will be necessary for us to raise some additional taxes.

One of the reasons why we are anxious to have this joint resolution passed before Congress adjourns for the holiday recess is because it is impossible for us to pass a bill providing additional revenues before the recess, and, failing to do that, the war-emergency act would expire by the limitation fixed in the act itself, namely, on the 31st day of December, 1915, and between that time and the time when a new measure could go into effect the Treasury would be deprived of the $6,800,000 that are now being received from this source.

Of course the Senator understands that we can not say we will pass a new measure by the 30th day of June next. Nobody knows how long the debate which might be precipitated, and which almost certainly would be precipitated, by a new bill would last. The Senator knows very well the time it takes in this body to pass a revenue measure. He knows also that in present conditions, with a campaign coming on, the Republican Party desiring to make an issue and to discuss this question, debate after the bill is before the Senate would probably consume a considerable length of time. We could not say, even if a bill were introduced as quickly as it could be prepared after the holidays, that it would pass before the 30th day of June next.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, we all agree with him upon the necessity for the speedy enactment of a measure of this kind. What we are more interested in is what the purpose of the administration is in the future along the same line.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to state very frankly to the Senator that, according to my understanding, it is the purpose after the holidays—at what time I can not now indicate; I suppose that will depend to some extent on the developments; we might wait a little while to see how much additional money we will need—ultimately, as soon as we can be wise enough to take it up, with something like a full possession of the facts upon which it should be based, it is the purpose, as I understand, to pass another measure or to amend the existing law.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator will agree with me that the proceedings to-day clearly indicate that this side will never delay the passage of an emergency measure of this character. We will have a vote upon this joint resolution undoubtedly in a very short time. If the pending measure continued what is called the emergency internal-revenue law only until the 30th day of June next, and it were necessary then to continue it until December, 1916, I am equally positive that the Senator would have no difficulty in getting a speedy decision of the Senate on that question; but the Senator has not fully answered the query I presented to him. I understand the proposition is to add a great deal of expense for what is called national preparedness. Is it the purpose of the administration and the purpose of the chairman of the Committee on Finance that the sum to cover this expense shall be raised entirely by taxation, or that any portion of it shall be raised by the issuance of Panama bonds or any other bonds?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state very frankly to the Senator that my impression is—of course I can not speak authoritatively upon that subject—but my impression is, and it is a very strong one, gathered from the same sources of information to which I have just referred, that there will be no bonds issued for the purpose of raising money to meet the emergency which now exists or to pay the expenses incident to an enlarged Navy or an enlarged Army.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am going to detain the Senate but a moment. I voted against the enactment of the law a year ago, the life of which is now sought to be extended by this resolution. I thought then and still believe it to have been prudent for Congress to have reduced appropriations, or, rather, to have made the appropriations suit the income which our general revenue laws would have produced, without resorting to this extraordinary measure. I thought then, and believe now, that such a course would have been best for the American people and in accord with Democratic platform promises. The people of the State whom I have the honor in part to represent in this Chamber were not in a condition then, nor are they now, to bear the taxation which this law imposes. The South is the only section of the Republic whose people have suffered pecuniarily on account of the European war. They have suffered grievously. The stagnation of business in the fall of 1914 on account of the war caused the producers of cotton to be forced to sell it for less than one-half of its real worth. The embargo put upon cotton by Great Britain this year has robbed the cotton growers of not less than 30 per cent of the value of their product. I do not think this administration has done what it should have done for the relief of the southern cotton farmer. But those matters have happened, they are things of an unhappy past, and can not be helped now. The wrong has been inflicted and the southern people are bearing the injustice with patriotic fortitude. The obligations of the Government of the United States must be met. Liabilities assumed under the law are debts of honor which must be paid. The only immediate source of revenue is through the operation of this law, and it expires by limitation the 31st of December, 1915. So there is nothing left for me to do except to vote for the resolution which extends its life for a year. It has been suggested that the revenue derived from this law may be used for "preparedness." Mr. President, if I thought one dollar of the money to be raised by this measure would go for "preparedness," as that term is understood, I should not vote for the resolution. But to meet an emergency, to enable the Government to absolve promptly its obligations, I shall vote for the resolution, and for that reason only.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a member of the Finance Committee I thought I would occupy a few moments in the discussion of the pending joint resolution, but I have changed my mind to the extent that I will occupy the attention of the Senate but a single moment.

The position of the two parties on the matter of taxation is well known, and the attitude which the Republicans take on the question of raising revenue is historical. Inasmuch as the Senator from North Carolina has assured us that some time between now and the adjournment of this session of Congress a comprehensive bill will be submitted to the Senate to raise the necessary funds to carry on the affairs of the Government, I shall withhold any discussion that I may wish to participate in until that time comes. When that time comes, and the question as to whether we ought to raise this money by import duties or whether we ought to raise it by levying direct taxes upon the people, overburdened as they are with taxation to-day, will be a subject of legitimate discussion in which I hope to have an opportunity to participate.

Mr. President, there is an emergency now, and when the Government needs money to carry on its affairs partisanship ought to cease and we ought to approach it in a spirit of patriotism rather than of party feeling. For that reason I will vote for the amendment which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has submitted, limiting the continuance of this tax to the 30th day of June, 1916, and if that shall be voted down I shall then exercise my judgment as to whether or not I shall vote for the joint resolution in its present form. If I should vote against it, I know that there will be a majority of the body for it, so that no harm will come. But, Mr. President, later on there will be a debate upon this question, and it is fortunate for those of us who believe in free and full debate in the Senate of the United States that there will be no cloture rule to prevent us from expressing our views at that time. If the existing tariff law is operating to the advantage of the people of this country then, surely it is doing what no other low-tariff law has done in the history of our Government; and I feel sure that it will be demonstrated that like all other Democratic laws of this kind it is destined to destroy the industries and the welfare of our people.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, an order was made the other day providing for an adjournment at 5 o'clock on each day unless otherwise ordered. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be suspended for to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is suspended for to-day.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I promise to be brief. I have an added motive for brevity, because I must also be obliged to be tedious—perhaps I should say more tedious than usual.

I appreciate the patriotic position of Republican Senators in permitting the pending joint resolution to pass prior to the holidays. The necessity for this measure was demonstrated by the chairman of the Finance Committee. The necessity for additional revenues is admitted on both sides of the Chamber, without reference to the character of the pending measure.

I have listened with attention to the indictment, the arraignment, the ex parte conviction of the Underwood Act as a failure so far as being a revenue-producing measure is concerned. I have listened with rapt attention to the fervid eloquence of Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I do not like to refrigerate their fevered declamations. I merely desire to try those declamations upon the touchstone of facts.

I shall eliminate from my remarks any discussion of mere questions of opinion and shall confine my observations to one or two points of fact. I shall not follow the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] in his declaration that but for the European war this country would be immersed in calamities which have no precedent in all the industrial history of the Republic.

Mr. President, that statement is easy to make. I do not undertake to say—nothing but infinite wisdom can say—what would have happened if what did happen had not happened. That is reserved for the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, who is never so happy as when he is miserable. I shall eliminate from this discussion any question as to whether direct taxes be better or worse than indirect taxes. That involves a fundamental distinction between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. The Democratic Party believes that every dollar extracted from the taxpayer ought to go into the Treasury of the Government. The Republican Party believes that for every dollar going into the Public Treasury, one, two, three, four, or even five dollars ought to go into the gilded treasuries of great industrial concerns that reciprocate favors with the Republican Party.

I adjourn to some future time any question as to whether an income tax is a just or an unjust tax. That is a matter of principle. That is a matter of opinion. That is another fundamental distinction between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party. The Democracy believes that wealth should be taxed rather than want. It believes that taxes should be imposed upon the citizen in accordance with his ability to pay, and not in accordance with his necessities or misfortunes. We have imposed a tax upon the wealth of the country, obliging the wealthiest to share with the humblest citizen of the Republic the burdens as well as the blessings of the State that protects them.

I adjourn to some future time the question as to the danger, real or fancied, of "dumping." I doubt not that it will be met in due season. This specter was raised by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who has a penchant for nightmares "past all surgery."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. Am I mistaken in the view that the Secretary of Commerce has raised this same specter in the public press and in public declarations?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, in so far as it is a real danger it will be not only raised and considered, but it will be laid, will be settled by patriotic Senators on this side of the Chamber in conjunction with Senators on that side of the Chamber. I do not intend to permit that question to be thrust into this discussion, so far as I am concerned. I intend to confine my part of this discussion to this one issue, the indictment and conviction of the Underwood measure as a revenue failure.

That measure needs no defense. It has justified itself, as I shall demonstrate. To that question and to the related question as to the effect of the war upon revenues shall I restrict my observations.

Mr. President, what was expected of the Underwood Tariff Act as a revenue-producing measure? The last estimate, as I recall, was that the Underwood Act would produce customs revenues amounting to $270,000,000. How did the event answer that expectation? In point of fact, it produced $293,000,000 of customs revenues—$23,000,000 more than was required of the measure. It behaved better than was expected. It did its duty, and even more than its duty.

What was expected of the Underwood Act in respect of income and corporation tax? The estimate, I believe, was $95,000,000; and that expectation was not realized. It fell to $71,000,000, owing to the difficulty of erecting and operating the new machinery. But taking all the revenues from the Underwood Act during that period, they aggregated a little more than $363,000,000, as against the estimated revenues of $365,000,000. So far as the performance of its promises is concerned—not the worst test—the measure was a success, not a failure.

But, Mr. President, for the purpose of judging the fitness of a revenue measure, like any other trial, we must have a standard of some sort—a standard of fitness, a standard of excellency, a standard of efficiency. I know of no better standard to invoke in this presence than the Payne-Aldrich tariff measure.

It is admitted on all hands that the Payne-Aldrich Act was the perfection of revenue-raising measures. The Payne-Aldrich law was a model revenue measure. It was an ideal. It was an exemplar. It was a paragon. It was the sine qua non, the ne plus ultra—whatever that may chance to mean. There is nothing better beyond. The Payne-Aldrich Revenue Act is the sea level from which we must measure all the heights of success, from which we must sound all the depths of failure.

No one can expect the Underwood Act to measure up to that magnificent, that matchless standard. What is the verdict of time and truth? During the first 10 months of the Underwood Act, from October 1, 1913, to August 1, 1914, when the European war broke out, the Underwood Act rendered into the Treasury $306,800,000. How much more did the Payne-Aldrich law pour into the Treasury during the corresponding 10 months of the preceding year? During the 10 months from October 1, 1912, until August 1, 1913, this paragon of Republican finance and finesse turned into the Treasury $296,700,000—$10,000,000 less than the Underwood failure. How much do Republicans expect and exact of Democratic legislation? It averaged $1,000,000 a month more than your nonpareil tariff measure, whose repeal you still recall "with many sighs."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wish to ask the Senator, if that is true, why should we have a war tax?

Mr. GORE. I am coming to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Why should we not have a revenue tax, if the receipts from the Underwood law and all other avenues of revenue have increased since the beginning of this administration?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not wonder that the Senator asks that question. If he had known that to be the truth, he would not have made the speech that he delivered in this presence to-day; neither would several other Senators who have enchanted us with their eloquence.

They say that during 3 months of this 10 months, from October 1, 1913, to January 1, 1914, the Underwood Act received assistance from the Payne-Aldrich law, from the duties on wool and woolen goods; that we are appropriating the posthumous blessings of the Payne-Aldrich law. That is true. Let us forego those blessings, let us take another lesson in history. I do not follow the Senator from Pennsylvania in his flights of fancy.

During the first seven months of 1914, from January 1 to August 1, when the war began, the Underwood Act produced $232,000,000 of revenue. I repeat it—$232,000,000 of revenue—as I hear a Senator denying it under his breath. What of the Payne-Aldrich Act during the corresponding seven months of the preceding year? From January 1, 1913, to August 1, 1913, the Payne-Aldrich law delivered to the Treasury $218,000,000 of revenue. I include all revenue. The Underwood Act during those seven months produced $18,000,000 more than the Republican model, than the Republican ideal.

I think Democrats are doing pretty well when they excel perfection by $18,000,000. In order to be exact, we ought to subtract from that $18,000,000, $2,000,000 for the remnant of sugar duty running from January 1 to March 1, 1914, which still leaves a balance of more than $15,000,000 in favor of Democratic incompetency as against Republican omniscience.

But that is not all. Take all the revenue from all sources during the first seven months of 1914 and we realize $456,000,000. The Underwood Act was in operation during that time. Take all revenue from all sources during the corresponding seven months of the preceding year under the Payne-Aldrich beau ideal, and the total was $429,000,000—$27,000,000 more under Democratic administration and laws than under Republican. From this should be subtracted, of course, the $2,000,000 remnant of sugar revenue and the $12,000,000 for the two battleships sold to Greece. This leaves a balance still of $12,000,000 in favor of the Democrat fiscal failure as against the paragon of Republican revenue perfection.

Mr. President, I have been equally amused and amazed at the arguments of Senators on the other side.

It is asserted by the Senator from Pennsylvania that but for the European war prosperity would be a reminiscence instead of a reality in this Republic, and that the misfortunes of our stricken neighbors have been our own fortune, our only redemption. This is another instance of rhetoric, rather than of reason, a mere matter of fancy, not of fact. I own that a part of the prevailing prosperity is due to the calamities of our neighbors across the sea. It would be uncandid to deny, and it would be unsafe to deny, so self-evident a truth. Nay, sir; it would be as uncandid for Democrats to deny that a part of this prosperity is due to the war as it is uncandid for Republican Senators to deny that the reduction of our imports and the reduction of our revenues have been due to this unexampled, this unspeakable strife.

Now, let us see. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] proved that during the fiscal year 1914 imports greatly increased as compared with the fiscal year 1913, the former year being under the Underwood Tariff Act. That is undoubtedly true. We expected imports to increase, and we expected the increasing imports to compensate for the reduction of tariff duties. But, sir, there is still a better comparison to determine whether or not this war is responsible for the falling off of imports and the falling off of revenue.

Compare the fiscal year 1915, all of which was under the Underwood Act, and all of which was during the war, saving the month of July, 1914, with the year closing June 30, 1914, nine months of which were also under the Underwood Tariff Act. In other words, compare the operation of the Underwood Act in war with the operation of the Underwood Act in peace.

In the fiscal year 1915, the duty-free articles fell off $120,000,000; the dutiable articles fell off $140,000,000, a total falling off of $260,000,000 in our imports during the fiscal year 1915—the war-stricken year—as compared with the fiscal year 1914, prior to the war.

Let us come a little more to details. Details confirm this truth. During the fiscal year 1914, nine months of which were under the Underwood Act, our imports under the metal schedule aggregated $50,700,000. During the next fiscal year, closing June 30, 1915, metal imports declined to $31,000,000. Revenues went hand in hand with imports. Was that due to the Underwood Act or was it due to the European war? If I had the power of putting Senators upon their honor, I would be willing to be bound by their answer.

Take Schedule D—wood and manufactures of wood. During the fiscal year 1914, nine months of which were under the Underwood Act, our imports under this schedule aggregated $12,200,000. During the fiscal year 1915, under the Underwood Act and during the war, those imports fell from $12,200,000 to $4,400,000. Was that due to the Underwood Act? Did imports fall off because duties had been reduced? Will you repudiate the Republican theory by committing yourself to such an admission as that?

I come now to "Schedule K, the keystone in the arch of protection." In the fiscal year 1914, from six to nine months under the Underwood Act, the imports were $39,000,000. During the succeeding year, under the Underwood Act and during the war, they fell to $30,000,000. Did less woolen goods come in because the duty had been reduced? Did less woolen goods find their way into this inviting market because Democrats had reduced the Republican tariff rates? Did foreign exporters withhold their products out of consideration for the wounded feelings of the Republicans, whose protection was dismantled and who had no recourse save in the humanity of their foreign competitors?

Mr. President, I have seen an estimate made—I have not verified the figures and do not vouch for their accuracy—that if the Payne-Aldrich law had continued during the fiscal year 1915, article for article and duty for duty, it would have raised only $24,000,000 more of customs revenue than the Underwood Act. I say I do not vouch for the statement, but if that be true this balance was more than compensated by the increases resulting from the income tax under the Underwood law, and the latter yielded a larger net revenue than would have been yielded by the Payne-Aldrich law under existing war conditions.

Mr. President, I was sorry to hear my friend from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] say that the embarrassed condition of the Treasury was not due to the war, but was due to our unwise fiscal system. I am astonished that a man of his intelligence, his patriotism, and his statesmanship should have bound himself to the mast of a sinking craft of that description. We can only arrive at conclusions in a matter of this kind by comparison. Now, let us see.

How has the existing European war affected the revenues of other countries in the Western Hemisphere? Take the port of Buenos Aires, in the Republic of Argentina. During the month of August, 1913, before the war, her revenues at that port were $14,000,000, paper money. During the month of August, 1914, the first month of the war, her revenues fell to $7,000,000, a decline of 50 per cent in the revenues at that port, which was typical of the whole country. Was that falling off due to the enactment of the Underwood bill in the United States? Was it due to some local Underwood Act in the Republic of Argentina?

Our revenues in August, 1913, were $30,000,000. In August, 1914, the first month of the war, they declined to $19,000,000, a falling off of 37 per cent in the United States, as against a falling off of 50 per cent in the port of Buenos Aires, Argentina.

But let us assume that both the United States and Argentina had perpetrated the folly of enacting an Underwood tariff measure. How stands the account in Chile?

During the months of August and September, 1913, the customs revenues of Chile amounted to $12,400,000. During the months of August and September, 1914, the first two months of the European war, they declined to $8,300,000, a falling off of 33 per cent. Was that due to the Underwood Act in the United States or was it due to the European war?

Take the account in the United States for the same months. In August and September, 1913, our customs revenues amounted to $58,100,000. During the months of August and September, 1914, the first two months of the war, they declined to $37,400,000, a decline of 35 per cent during those two months in the United States, and a decline of 33 per cent in the Republic of Chile.

Mark the percentages. Are you shocked when I call upon you to attribute these declines in far-distant countries to an international, to a world-wide, cause rather than attributing the decline in those countries to the enactment of the Underwood law?

But perhaps there was something local in both Argentina and Chile. Perhaps they were both swept into the vortex of folly and reduced their tariff protection by enacting an Underwood law. How stands the account in Uruguay?

During the months of August and September, 1913, the customs revenues in Uruguay aggregated 2,800,000 pesos. During the months of August and September, 1914, the first two months of the war, her customs revenues aggregated 1,700,000 pesos—a falling off of a little more than 1,000,000 pesos, a decline of 39 per cent. I have already shown that the decline in our revenues for the same months was 35 per cent. May it not be possible, Senators, that the European war interrupted imports here and interrupted imports into those countries and occasioned the corresponding decline in revenues in Argentina, in Chile, and in Uruguay?

Let us take a little longer period. Two months is hardly a broad enough foundation for such general deductions. Take eight months in Uruguay—from July, 1913, to February, 1914, inclusive—prior to the war. During those months her customs revenues aggregated 10,600,000 pesos. Take the eight months beginning with July, 1914, and ending with February, 1915, including seven months of war, her revenues amounted to 7,000,000 pesos—a falling off of 31 per cent in the revenues of that Republic during those eight months.

How does history testify upon this point in the Republic of the United States? During the eight months from July, 1913, to February, 1914, inclusive, our revenues were $199,900,000. During the corresponding eight months of the next year, from July, 1914, to February, 1915, inclusive, they fell to $138,700,000. "What a fall was here, my countrymen," a fall of 30 per cent in the United States during those eight months, as against a decline of 31 per cent in Uruguay during the corresponding eight months. Mark the percentage.

Does it not at least suggest itself to Senators, particularly to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], where we see this effect practically world-wide, or at least as broad as the Western Hemisphere, that these corresponding effects may be due to the selfsame cause that was operating upon the imports and the revenues of all these Republics, occasioning a similar loss everywhere?

It was said of President McKinley that he had the faculty of crystallizing statistics into poetry. I profess no such faculty, and must beg pardon for inflicting this array of statistics upon worn and weary Senators. One more illustration, however.

Take the Republic of Brazil—the largest Republic, territorially, in South America. In January, 1914, before the war, her revenues from customs aggregated 7,900,000 milreis. During the month of January, 1915, after the war broke out, her customs revenues shrunk to 3,100,000 milreis—a falling off of 60 per cent. In the United States in January, 1914, prior to the war, our revenues were $23,700,000. In January, 1915, after the cloudburst of blood in Europe, they shriveled to $16,500,000—a shrinkage of 37 per cent.

Mr. President, remembering that the Underwood measure produced all the revenue required of it, that during the first 10 months of its existence it produced more than the Payne-Aldrich law in the corresponding months of the year preceding, that in the first 7 months preceding the war of 1914 it produced more revenue than the Payne-Aldrich Act in the 7 months of the preceding year, are we not justified in demurring to the evidence adduced under the indictment against the Underwood Act? Are not Senators on the other side willing to enter a nolle-pros? They have instituted these charges against the Underwood law; and I answer that tried by every test, measured by every standard, the Underwood Act has produced more revenue in a given period than did the Payne-Aldrich Act—the final flower and fruit of Republican statesmanship.

Even a Democratic tariff measure has a right to a fair trial. May we not appeal to Republican Senators to discontinue this idle, this unfounded, impeachment of the Underwood tariff measure when, judged in the white light of history and truth, it not only is not a failure but it has no superior in the history of the fiscal legislation of the Republic.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is one of the prime duties of Congress to supply the funds necessary to carry on the Government. It is a conceded fact here that some legislation is necessary to supply additional revenue for that purpose. I am opposed to direct taxation so long as the necessary revenues can be derived from reasonable tariff rates, and I should prefer to see the additional revenues raised by that means. But that seems to be out of the question. The party in power would not consent to legislate in that way. That being impossible, I should prefer to see bonds issued to meet this temporary emergency rather than to resort to direct taxation. But, as I have said, it is the duty of Congress to meet the situation in some way. If my vote were necessary under these conditions to carry this legislation, I should not hesitate to support the resolution if no other means could be agreed upon.

I am sorry that this means of raising money is to be continued in force and, if it must be, that it is not limited to a shorter time, so that some permanent legislation might be brought about that would meet these conditions more satisfactorily. It does not make very much difference, Mr. President, whether the Underwood law is right or wrong in the present emergency or whether the Payne-Aldrich law was right or wrong. We have reached a condition where it is necessary to raise additional revenue, and whatever may have been the reason for it we are under obligation to so legislate as to meet that condition, and I regard it as a patriotic duty on the part of Congress to so legislate as to meet the needs of the Government.

I shall vote against the joint resolution because my convictions are against this means of raising revenue. If it were necessary in order to raise the revenue, and there was no better way to do it, I might waive my convictions under the circumstances and support the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a couple of minutes. I simply wish to refer to the remarks made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

I want to say to the Senate that all the figures which have been given by the Senator from Oklahoma proving that the Underwood Tariff Act is a greater revenue producer than the Payne-Aldrich Act are based entirely upon the fact that within the Underwood Act was placed the income tax provision, and he has not confined himself to the duties collected upon the importation of articles into this country.

For the first nine months of 1913, under the Payne-Aldrich Act, there were imports to the amount of $1,327,000,000. The duties collected (and every dollar of it went into the Treasury of the United States notwithstanding indications to the contrary) were $242,634,000. The average rate of duty was 18.3 per cent.

For the same nine months of 1914 under the pending Underwood Act, and two months of the period when war was in force, the imports amounted to $1,410,000,000, a great increase over the previous year. But the duties collected were only $143,166,000, or an average duty rate of 12.2 per cent instead of 18.3 per cent.

That is not all. For the same nine months of 1915, when war was in force all of that time, the importations were $1,362,000,000 and the duties collected were only $148,225,000, or an average rate of duty of 11.3 per cent.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that with the same amount of goods imported into this country, with the exception of a very few dollars, during 1913, under the Payne-Aldrich Act, the Treasury was enriched with the duties collected to the amount of $242,000,000, whereas the Government collected for the same amount of goods in 1915 only $148,225,000, or a difference of $94,399,000. That is why you are asking for the continuation of this burdensome tax.

I simply want to say that much, Mr. President, because it is absolutely true. Of course the Senator might just as well have added this so-called war tax to the amount of revenues collected at the ports of entry as to have added the income tax, which amounted, in the very figures he quoted, during that year to over $87,000,000. We can go and pile up these taxes and then say that the amount of income to the Government of the United States under this administration is more than it was under the Republican administration. The more they are added, my friends, the more the burden falls upon the backs of the people and the more right have the people to complain.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in closing the debate on the resolution, I shall detain the Senate only a few minutes, perhaps not over five minutes.

An attack has been made in the course of the debate upon the bookkeeping of the Treasury Department. At this time I do not desire to go into that question, but I desire to place in the RECORD as an appendix the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I send to the Clerk's desk, explaining fully the reasons for the change in method of bookkeeping. That statement will be all the reply that it is necessary to make to that attack.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, the matter referred to will go into the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The daily statement of the United States Treasury and the monthly public-debt statement of the Government have been revised by a committee appointed by order of Secretary McAdoo so as to make them more intelligible and clear to the public. The new daily statement will represent the actual condition of the Treasury, so far as it is possible to present it, at the close of business each day. The new public-debt statement will show the actual condition of the Treasury and the state of the public debt at the close of business each month. The new form for the daily Treasury statement becomes effective October 1, 1915, and that for the public-debt statement October 31, 1915.

The most important points in which the new form of daily statement differs from the old are the following:

The assets and liabilities of the Government have heretofore been published under two general classifications, viz: (1) The general fund, and (2) the currency trust funds, the general fund, and the gold reserve fund.

The new form shows the assets and liabilities divided into three classes, viz: (1) Gold, (2) silver dollars, and (3) the general fund. This gives at a glance the amount of gold and the amount of silver dollars in the Treasury, the liabilities against such coin and bullion, and the actual condition of the general fund.

In the new form the item "Disbursing officers' balances" is excluded from the liability side of the general fund and included in the net balance. These disbursing officers' balances consist of amounts placed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of disbursing officers, against which they are authorized to draw checks in payment of public obligations. These amounts are funds of the United States in the same sense that the balance remaining, subject to the warrant of the Secretary alone, is money of the United States. In the past, whenever the Secretary has placed an amount to the credit of a disbursing officer, it has been the custom to carry that on the Treasury statement as a disbursement. As a matter of fact, the money in many instances is not spent for months, and sometimes not at all, being returned to the Secretary's account. Funds are placed to the credit of disbursing officers practically as a bookkeeping arrangement, and they are as much a part of the working balance of the Treasury as the money which is subject to the warrant of the Secretary. As the net balance should represent the funds in the Treasury available for paying the current obligations of the Government, the amount placed on the books to the credit of disbursing officers should be included therein.

The amount deposited by national banks for the retirement of national-bank notes but not yet paid out for that purpose is also included in the net balance. In the old statement this amount was carried on the liability side of the general fund. This was an error, because by law deposits for the retirement of national-bank notes are a part of the public debt. The act of July 14, 1890, prescribes that such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and that the notes thus rendered subject to retirement by the United States shall be carried as a part of the public debt. This fund is not the 5 per cent fund provided for the redemption of the current circulation of national banks, but is a fund for the redemption of the notes of national banks which have ceased to circulate notes, or which have reduced their circulation. As directed by the act of July 14, 1890, the amount to the credit of this fund was placed in the general fund balance, where it was carried continuously until the early part of this administration (1913), when the form of daily Treasury statement was changed. The item is now restored to the general fund balance, where it belongs, and will appear as a liability on what was previously known as the monthly public debt statement.

Following the general fund statement appears the daily trial balance of the general fund, entitled "Receipts and disbursements this day." This is a simple statement of the day's transactions. One important change contained in this table, as well as in the "Comparative analysis of receipts and disbursements," on page 3, is the segregation of Panama Canal receipts.

In the past it has been customary to set forth Panama Canal disbursements separately as extraordinary expenditures, but receipts from tolls, profits from the sales of material on account of the canal, etc., have been included in the ordinary miscellaneous receipts. In future these Panama Canal receipts, like the disbursements on account of the Panama Canal, will appear separately.

The new daily statement is on a cash basis. Receipts have been reported on a cash basis, while disbursements have been on a mixed basis. This has proved confusing. Under the new form disbursements, like receipts, represent cash transactions.

It will be impossible to state outstanding checks in the column of liabilities in the daily statement, because it is not practicable to get the information daily from disbursing officers. Outstanding checks and warrants are offset in large measure, however, by receipts which are in transit to the Treasury. All outstanding warrants and checks will be shown monthly in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

Several tables that appeared on the fourth page of the old statement are either omitted entirely as unimportant or uninforming, or are included in the new items on page 4—"Federal reserve notes and national-bank notes outstanding" and "Transactions affecting Federal reserve and national bank-note circulation." "Bonds held in trust for national banks" still appears, but the table of "Pay warrants drawn" has been omitted. It is believed that a daily statement of these warrants is of no value, and it will hereafter appear in the form of "Pay warrants issued," monthly, in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

The new statement will give an accurate idea of the actual condition of the Treasury as far as it is ascertainable from day to day. The old statement, with its cumbersome notations of purely bookkeeping transactions within the Treasury Department, which had little bearing upon actual expenditures, has been very confusing and has led to much misconception as to the actual condition of the Treasury.

The public-debt statement in the new form is changed to "Financial statement of the United States Government."

Instead of reproducing the daily statement for the last day of each month on the public-debt statement the new statement will include a table of cash available to pay maturing obligations, or, in other words, the working balance of the Treasury, with the liabilities against it. On the asset side of this table will be the net balance in the Treasury. On the liability side of this statement will be set up outstanding warrants, checks, and matured coupons. While it will not be practicable, as stated above, to get daily from disbursing officers a statement of their outstanding checks, it will be possible to get this information once a month.

The monthly statement will also include a table of warrants and checks issued by departments which will show the expenditures according to this classification.

It will be necessary to get information from disbursing officers all over the country for the monthly statement, but it is believed that this can be so expedited that the department will be able to issue the statement on the 15th of each month.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has called in question the estimate which I submitted to the Senate as to the amount of revenue to be raised from sugar, in case that tax is extended, to include the last two months of the present fiscal year. Of course, what I stated was a mere estimate, but it was a Treasury estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. SIMMONS. In support of that estimate I wish to submit the following: Under the present tax upon sugar the duty collected for the fiscal year 1915 was, in round numbers, $50,000,000, or an average of $4,200,000 per month. The estimate which I submitted allowed for the last two months about $7,500,000 per month. The reasons why the department has made this larger estimate for the last two months of the year are briefly stated, first, because there is a constantly increasing demand for sugar; second, May and June are among the months in which the largest amount of sugar is imported; and, third, withdrawals from bond after an extension of the present rate on sugar. That is to say, in anticipation of the expiration of the law on May 1 the natural temptation and course of business of sugar importers would be to accumulate the product in bond in large quantities and draw it out immediately after the act expires.

Mr. President, I had intended to pursue a different course from that which I am going to pursue. This morning when I presented the report of the committee recommending the passage of the joint resolution I thought it would be amply sufficient for the purposes of the situation to make a brief statement of the condition of the Treasury showing the necessity for an extension of this tax. That was all I proposed to do at that time. I thought that would be sufficient. However, I anticipated that on account of the exigencies of politics our friends on the other side of the Chamber might see fit to enter upon a tariff discussion at this time, although it seemed to be entirely unnecessary, irrelevant, and unwarranted.

When that discussion began and took the scope it did, I sent for data and made preparations to meet the misleading statements and arguments being advanced by the other side; but the speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], our new and greatly esteemed colleague, has been so clear, full, and conclusive along the lines that I should have followed, and that of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has been so strong upon certain other lines to which I had intended to direct my attention, that I do not see any necessity for prolonging debate, indeed I think it would be superfluous, so completely have they answered and demolished every assault made by the opposition upon the existing tariff act. However, Mr. President, this debate has served a good purpose. I thought it unnecessary because irrelevant to the subject before the Senate, but we have had it, and I want to say now that I am glad we have had it. The facts that have been presented and established with respect to the operation of the Democratic tariff before the beginning of the war and since show clearly and convincingly the flimsiness of the grounds upon which the Republican Party propose to wage its next campaign and so demolish their paramount if not their only issue.

Mr. President, it has been shown, yea, demonstrated, because the facts prove it, and because there is no escape from the conclusion to which those facts lead, that the present tariff prior to the beginning of the European war yielded not only enough revenue, as the sponsors of that measure had promised it would yield, to pay all the expenses of the Government, but after paying all those expenses of the Government, exclusive of Panama Canal disbursements, it left a surplus of $34,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States.

It is said that during that period of time we were enabled to make this showing because until a late period in the calendar year 1913 the Payne-Aldrich bill was in force. It is further said that we were able to make this showing because after the present tariff law went into effect the Payne-Aldrich duties upon raw wool and manufactured wool were continued for several months. Mr. President, that that argument does not meet the situation has been demonstrated beyond peradventure by the facts stated by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. During the period from the 1st day of October, 1913, three days before the Democratic tariff went into effect, until the 1st day of August, 1914, the Democratic bill brought to the Treasury $10,000,000 more than the Payne-Aldrich bill brought to the Treasury during a like period for the preceding fiscal years; but our opponents answer that this calculation included a period when some of the duties, namely, those on wool and woolens, under the Payne-Aldrich law were still in force. Let us then begin with January 1, 1914, when the Democratic tariff was in full force and effect, except as to sugar. Between that period—January 1, 1914, and the 1st day of August, 1914—the Democratic tariff brought into the Treasury $18,000,000 more than the Payne-Aldrich bill brought into the Treasury during a like period of the preceding years.

An almost equally striking result is shown by comparing the receipts from customs, incomes, and internal revenue for those periods. I have the figures here. They show that from January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, including receipts from customs, incomes, and internal-revenue taxes, the Democratic tariff brought into the Treasury $25,000,000 more than the Payne-Aldrich law brought to the Treasury from the same sources during a similar period in the preceding fiscal years.

So, Mr. President, when we had no tariff dislocations as the result of a continent-wide war in another quarter of the world, when business was based upon normal conditions, during the first fiscal year of its operation this Democratic law, now so viciously assailed, yielded not only enough revenue to support the Government and left a surplus of $34,000,000, and, taking the shorter period, when its provisions went into operation, between January 1, 1914, to August 1, 1914, it yielded from customs and incomes $10,000,000 more than the act which it superseded yielded for a like period in the preceding fiscal years, and when from internal revenue, customs, and incomes it brought into the Treasury for those seven months $27,000,000 more than the act which it superseded yielded for a like period in the preceding fiscal years.

Unquestionably, Mr. President, the war has greatly affected our revenues. I do not think that proposition can be denied by anybody who has given any study to the facts. During the last fiscal year our imports fell off, in round numbers, $219,000,000. This, of course, resulted in a large loss of revenue, but there was a loss of revenue not only on account of the lesser importations, but on account of the changed character of importations since the beginning of the war as compared with the character of those before the war.

The falling off of these importations has been largely, almost entirely, confined to importations from countries in Europe since the war.

There have been increases in our importations from South America. Our imports from Cuba have increased, and there have been other increases; but there has been a marked falling off in our imports from Europe. Our total importations from Europe during the fiscal year 1914 were $895,602,868, while during the fiscal year 1915 they were $614,358,645—a total falling off of $281,000,000 in round numbers. The significance of these figures as they bear upon our customs revenues will be apparent when we consider that the countries at war in Europe are the countries from which we import those manufactured products that bear the highest rate of duties and from which the greatest revenue is derived. The decline in our customs revenues is due not only to a decrease in imports since the war but to the changed character of those imports.

Mr. President, I say I am glad this debate has taken place. It has given the American people the facts; it has given the American people conclusive answers to the arguments which an industrial publicity propaganda has been so studiously and energetically disseminating throughout the country, raising all the confusion and doubt that misrepresentation and unfair statement of facts and figures often bring. It will show to the country, as it has shown to the Senate, how untenable and indefensible are the grounds upon which the Republican Party rest their assaults on the Democratic tariff act of 1913.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, before the Senator from North Carolina takes his seat, I desire to get a direct understanding of one of the Senator's statements as I understood it. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that in the fiscal year 1914 the present tariff act paid the expenses of the Government and left a surplus in the Treasury of $34,000,000. I understood the Senator to make that statement

Mr. SIMMONS. In the first year of the operation of the tariff act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wanted to ask the Senator if we are to understand from that statement that at the end of that first year there were $34,000,000 more in the Treasury of the United States than there were at the beginning of that year?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator understands exactly what is meant by "surplus."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand the Senator, then——

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is playing on words.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. When I speak of "surplus" the Senator will understand that I mean it in the ordinary acceptation in which that word is used. I mean, of course, that, after paying the expenses of the Government for that fiscal year out of the receipts for that fiscal year, excluding Panama Canal disbursements, there was that much left.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Just one moment. I am not yet clear what, if any, amount of money was in the Treasury of the United States when that law began to operate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not able right now to furnish the Senator the figures. There may have been a considerable amount in the general fund, as there is now.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I thought the Senator might enlighten us.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator understands I was not speaking about the amount of money that was in the Treasury when the law went into effect; I was speaking about the amount of money that was collected during that fiscal year from the customhouses, from the income tax, and from internal revenue, and I was offsetting that amount with the disbursements that were made in that year under the appropriations for that year.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What I wanted to find out, if the Senator could tell me, was how much less of a surplus was in the Treasury of the United States or how much less money there was in the Treasury of the United States at the end of that fiscal year, if any, than there was at its beginning; but, unfortunately, I could not make my inquiry understood by the Senator. I wish the Senator could understand me. He can not understand me or he would answer candidly. I ask him, as chairman of the committee, and therefore as being well informed——

Mr. SIMMONS. I tried to state very frankly to the Senator the facts.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I asked him, for instance, how much money we had in the Treasury of the United States when the Underwood Act began to operate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have tried to state very frankly to the Senator that I have not the facts or the figures with reference to the money in the general fund of the Treasury at that time. I was speaking solely with reference to revenue derived under the act during the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will state to the Senator that there was in the Treasury of the United States at the time I have mentioned something like $140,000,000 or $150,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I trust I have not less patriotism than other Senators, yet I shall vote against the joint resolution, not that I am unwilling to provide sufficient money to meet the necessary expenses and the valid obligations of the Government, but because I have a choice as to the way of raising the money.

I realize that there is a condition which confronts the country to-day and that it must be met by action rather than by theory, and that condition is twofold. There is trouble in the Treasury. The Government needs more money, and the country needs relief from the method of taxation which has already been imposed and which this resolution proposes to perpetuate for another year. There is a way to relieve the Treasury which will also relieve the burden the people are now bearing because of this misnamed "war tax." That it is an emergency tax is conceded by Senators who advocate the extension of the law. They undoubtedly believe that it is a tax that ought to be taken off of the people. They do not dare to fix the time at which it should be removed, but say "in the possibly near future" it is to be terminated.

Mr. President, I realize that it is hardly in place at this time to discuss the tariff, and I am not going to do so. I have been impressed all afternoon, however, by the fact that Senators who favor this resolution have attempted to defend the Underwood tariff law by insisting that it has furnished relief to the people by removing a tax from them which they had carried under the Payne-Aldrich law. Why, sir, I am thoroughly convinced, as I think you are, that if, for instance, the sugar tariff had remained as it was under the Payne-Aldrich law there is not a consumer in the United States who would now be paying more for sugar than he is at present paying for it under the reduced duty of existing law. I believe that the same thing is true as to a majority of articles upon which duties are reduced. What have we done? We have granted a benefit to the importer of articles which have been consumed in the United States and we have placed a burden of direct taxation upon our people to recoup the loss to the Treasury. Prices to the consumer have not been reduced because of reduced duties, but the Public Treasury has been depleted by more than the amount of taxes taken from our people by this emergency tax law. You have made a present to the importer by practically the amount of reduced duties and have taxed our people to make that present. Nothing is clearer to me than that.

I do not agree with many of my colleagues on this side who say that your tariff bill would not have raised more revenue had it not been for the war. I think that revenue was one of the objects of the bill, and that without any regard to the effect upon domestic industry. Democrats intentionally disregarded the fact that by flooding this country with foreign goods, by furnishing competition, as the Senator from Alabama has stated, abundant, unfair, destructive competition from abroad, we would render American capital unremunerative and deny opportunity for work to American laboring men, and thus place upon them a burden which ought not to be placed there.

I shall vote against this joint resolution, with the vain hope that it can be defeated, because I would know that Congress in case of such defeat could and might immediately set about raising the money to meet the obligations of the Government in a proper and just manner. At any rate the Senate would have an opportunity to correct some of the glaring defects of the existing law. Why are Senators so anxious to adjourn so long before Christmas? Shall we have to extend the session through next summer and into the fall to make up for this waste of time now? Why ought not Senators to have been as active in preparing at this time a bill that would be just and equitable to the people as they have been active heretofore in preparing bills in committee to present for our consideration?

I would rather stay here now and consider upon its merits, if it has any, a measure which a majority of this body, as it exists to-day, believes is an unjust law. Why, there are Senators here who are going to vote for this emergency measure who believe it is unjust, who believe there are better ways of raising the revenue and meeting the expenses of the Government. Why this haste? Why not consider it at least up to the 30th day of December and try to get a measure that will relieve the people? They have been petitioning you, as they have been me, in protest against this iniquitous tax which was unwisely placed upon the statute books in the first instance. It is evidently your purpose to put them off with the indefinite, unsatisfactory hope that at some later, more politically convenient time you will consider their prayers.

So, while I trust I am as patriotic as my colleague from California [Mr. WORKS] in wanting to raise sufficient money to meet the legitimate expenses of the Government, I have a choice as to the way it shall be raised. I shall vote against this joint resolution, and would more eagerly vote against it if I knew that my vote would defeat it, because I would know that that would not necessarily embarrass the Government, but would give at least an opportunity to secure a more just law. We have time enough to consider properly legislation in the interest of the people, and we should do that rather than rush measures for the supposed political interest of a party which has legislated unwisely and does not have the courage either to repeal its mistake or resubmit it for correction. I realize the embarrassment of the administration, but the passage of this resolution will only add to that embarrassment.

So, Mr. President, I shall take much pleasure in voting against this, to my mind, unwise joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated, so that we may understand exactly what we are voting on?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On lines 8 and 9 it is proposed to strike out the words "December 31" and in lieu thereof to insert the words "June 30."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when Mr. ASHURST's name was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. ASHURST] on account of sickness. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. BURLEIGH's name was called). I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is detained by illness from attendance upon the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY].

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I understand he would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], which I transfer to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called). Were I not paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I should vote "yea"; but as he is not in his seat I must withhold my vote.

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. He is paired with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired on this bill with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and on that account withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea" on this amendment.

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. OLIVER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is absent from Washington; and his pair with the senior Senator from Oregon has been transferred, as already stated. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). My colleague [Mr. WARREN] is unavoidably absent from the city. His pair has already been announced by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BRADY] is detained on account of illness. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of important business. He is paired with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. That pair has been announced by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING. There is a colleague on the other side with whom the Secretary sometimes gets me mixed up on the roll call. If the Secretary recorded the vote as given by the Senator on the other side, I am quite willing to let it stand as "nay," but from a different point of view than that from which he would cast that vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is recorded in the affirmative, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] in the negative.

Mr. HARDING. I desire to be recorded in the negative.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire my vote to be in the negative, intending to vote against the original resolution.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 50, as follows:

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when Mr. ASHURST's name was called). I wish to repeat the announcement of the illness of my colleague [Mr. ASHURST], and to state that he is detained from the Senate on that account.

Mr. BORAH (when Mr. BRADY's name was called). I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. BRADY]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when Mr. BURLEIGH's name was called). I again announce that the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] is paired with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. SHIVELY]. If the Senator from Maine were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I again announce that I am paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. BRYAN (when Mr. FLETCHER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] on this question. I regret that I can not vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when Mr. LODGE's name was called). I again announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. LODGE] and his pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay" on the vote now being taken.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. PENROSE (when Mr. OLIVER's name was called). As has been already explained, my colleague [Mr. OLIVER] is absent and is paired with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Announcing, as I previously stated, my pair and its transfer, I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VARDAMAN (when Mr. SHIELDS's name was called). I announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. He is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. If the Senator from Tennessee were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KERN (when Mr. SHIVELY's name was called). I again announce the unavoidable absence and pair of my colleague [Mr. SHIVELY]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was called). I again announce the absence and pair of my colleague [Mr. SMITH]. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Michigan was called). The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when Mr. WARREN's name was called). I desire to announce the necessary absence and pair of my colleague [Mr. WARREN], and to say that if present he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 45, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—45.

So the joint resolution was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 696) authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 60) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The message further announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 38) to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa;

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.;

H. R. 3638. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.;

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916; and

H. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915.

FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the following resolution (S. Res. 39), submitted by Mr. POMERENE this day, reported it without amendment:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof duly authorized by said committee, be, and it is hereby, instructed to make inquiry concerning and report to the Senate thereon:

First. The extent and location of the territory affected by the foot-and-mouth disease and the number of cattle, hogs, sheep, and other animals affected thereby or exposed thereto.

Second. What quarantine or other measures have been adopted by the Federal or State authorities for the prevention or eradication of said disease.

Third. What changes, if any, should be adopted by the Federal or State authorities in their methods of quarantine.

Fourth. What remedy or remedies are known or used in preventing or eradicating said disease.

That said committee or subcommittee is authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate; to hold sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation; to employ stenographers and such other assistants as it may deem necessary; to send for persons, books, records, and papers; to administer oaths, and as early as practicable report to the Senate the results of its investigation, including all testimony taken by it; and that the expenses of the inquiry shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution. In explanation of the request, I may state that this same resolution was introduced by me about a year ago authorizing the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to make an investigation of the foot-and-mouth disease. They continued that investigation, but were not quite able to complete it, and it is their desire to take some testimony during the holidays so as to be able to make a final report at the reconvening of Congress. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that Senate resolution 37, providing for the employment of a stenographer to take testimony before the Committee on the Philippines, be considered at this time. It has been approved and reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Philippines, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to subpœna witnesses, to send for books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had or have been held in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

DISTRICT FISCAL RELATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) extending the time for filing the report of the joint committee of Congress on the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the United States, which was, in line 6, to strike out "1st day of February" and insert "10th day of January."

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF FOR PEOPLE OF POLAND.

Mr. KERN. I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read, after which I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 38), as follows:

Whereas the attention of the people of the United States has been from time to time directed to the appalling situation in Poland, where practically the entire population to-day is homeless, and where men, women, and children are perishing by the thousands for lack of shelter, clothing, and food; and

Whereas the people of the United States have demonstrated their sympathy for the suffering people on all sides in the great European war by their splendid and successful charitable work in Belgium, Servia, and other places; and feeling that the American people would quickly respond to an appeal for help in Poland, once the tragedy of the situation there is brought home to them: Be it

Resolved, That, appreciating the suffering of that stricken people, it is suggested that the President of the United States set aside a day in the forthcoming holiday season upon which day a direct appeal to the sympathy of all American citizens shall be made, and an opportunity shall be given for all to contribute to a much-needed holiday fund for relief in Poland.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. In this connection I desire to ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a short statement as to the conditions in Poland, written by Mr. Louis E. Van Norman who speaks knowingly of the matter. He is the author of a work entitled "Poland, the Knight Among Nations." It is a short statement and gives a very graphic account of the suffering there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The cause of prostrate Poland should appeal to the generous consideration of the American people even more than that of Belgium. The Belgians have already received help and comfort from the civilized world. Moreover, they have had the satisfaction of all suffering together for their country. With Poland the war has been fratricidal—literally brothers of the flesh fighting against each other in the armies of Russia, Austria, and Germany. There are more than 17,000,000 Poles directly in the zone of the fighting—in that strip of perhaps 200 miles wide over which from east to west and west to east the armies of Russia and the Teutonic allies have swept in turn. The ruin and desolation of this country is so complete that it is almost impossible to believe the testimony of eye witnesses. More than 250 cities and more than 8,000 villages and hamlets have been burned, to say nothing of the farms, factories, and isolated chateaux. Many of the inhabitants are literally without shelter or food. When asked recently, a returned newspaper correspondent said to the writer:

"Live! They don't live. They are dying of hunger. That small portion of Poland that has been spared the backward and forward shift of the fighting is now no more than a desert, sprinkled with tombs and smoking rubbish. Among these, people homeless and without shelter, wander, stupified and without realizing what has come upon them. They keep themselves alive as best they can on roots and dead animals. It is reported that the once famous opera singers, the brothers De Reszke, are living in a cellar."

Relief committees have been established at Posen, Cracow, Petrograd, Moscow, and in Switzerland. In the United States there are several. Up to the present, however, the need has been too vast for the ability of these more or less sporadic efforts. There are close to 4,000 Poles in the United States who make excellent American citizens. In our Revolutionary War two of Poland's idealistic soldiers, Kociusco and Pulaski, helped us to win our independence. Perhaps it may be said truthfully that we owe something to this unfortunate people.

LOUIS E. VAN NORMAN.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House has passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 7) providing that when the two Houses of Congress adjourn it be until Tuesday, January 4, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States; and

H. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

House concurrent resolution 7.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Tuesday, January 4, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 17, 1915.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, offered the following prayer:

Good Lord, deliver us from hate and revenge, from sordid hearts and greed, from all ignoble desires and selfish ambitions, from the muckraker and gossip monger, from strife and contention among ourselves, and entangling alliances with other nations, that we may pursue the even tenor of our way and promote the highest interests of our people "with malice toward none and charity for all," doing unto others as we would be done by, that we may hasten the coming of Thy kingdom in the earth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Carr, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the joint committee of Congress on the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the United States; and

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

CLERK TO CONTINUE DIGEST OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] offers a resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution (H. Res. 53, Rept. No. 11) providing for the appointment of the clerk to continue Digest of Claims.

Resolved, That, until otherwise provided, the clerk to continue Digest of Claims shall be appointed in the manner now provided by law for the appointment of the clerk of the Committee on War Claims.

SEC. 2. That the salary of the said clerk, at the rate now provided by law, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the House until otherwise provided by law.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, in line 7, by striking out the words "until otherwise provided by law" and inserting "during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment in the form of a substitute, the last one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute: Strike out all of the resolution after the word "Resolved," in the first line, and insert the following in lieu thereof, viz: "That the chairman of the Committee on War Claims be authorized to appoint a clerk to continue Digest of Claims during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, at the salary of $208.33 per month, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, on the 4th of March, 1888, there was provided a clerk to make a digest of war claims, and he was specifically named—Mr. Holloway. He continued to perform that duty, and was provided for from year to year by the annual appropriation until June last, when he died.

The Committee on War Claims finds it necessary to have some one to discharge the duties which Mr. Holloway performed. That original provision stated that Mr. Holloway was the person who was to do the work. He was appointed. There was no provision in the original resolution for naming his successor, so that it became necessary in providing for such an officer to provide for it by resolution, and this resolution provides that this person shall be appointed by the chairman of the Committee on War Claims to perform the duties performed by Mr. Holloway, during the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, at the salary which Mr. Holloway received.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the position which Mr. Holloway held under the law as it then existed was a necessary and important position in view of the service to be performed. Mr. Holloway was thoroughly familiar with the work, as his long experience made him familiar with all the laws relating to war claims, and that committee has jurisdiction of no other. There were a number of acts, one called the Bowman Act and another called the Tucker Act, and different amendatory acts thereto, relating to the payment of war claims, by which the Court of Claims was given jurisdiction of war claims, to pass on the facts and report the bills back to this House. Vast numbers of those claims were reported, and they were considered in bills known as "omnibus bills."

In the Senate there is only one committee having jurisdiction of that subject—the Committee on Claims—having jurisdiction of war claims as well as all other claims. In the House we have two committees, a Committee on War Claims and a Committee on Claims. The result was, while I was a member of the Committee on War Claims for 14 years, that when the omnibus war claims bills went to the Senate they were amended not only by adding claims of like character contained in the House bills, but they also added claims which would naturally be reported in this House from the Committee on Claims. During the Sixty-second Congress an omnibus war claims bill went over to the Senate, and there a large number of claims were added which had not been considered by any committee in this House, not being war claims, and among other amendments there was an amendment offered and passed in the Senate, which I believe was section 4 or 5 of that bill, and the conferees failed to agree.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Morse, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LEE, and myself, as chairman of the committee, were the House conferees. We could not agree to the Senate amendments in many respects. Among other amendments was one which has now become law, having been made a part of the last war-claims' bill, offered in the Senate by Senator Crawford, by which the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims ceases absolutely on all war claims referred to it under the Tucker and Bowman Acts, and by which the statute of limitations has been revived against all those claims. It appears from the RECORD that when this amendment was offered in the Senate it was objected to by Senator REED, and that seems to have been the only objection that was made to it. Subsequently his objection was withdrawn and the bill was passed with that amendment in it, which is now a part of the law. The omnibus claims bill came to this House with that amendment in it. The bill was laid upon the Speaker's table and did not go to the Committee on War Claims. Unanimous consent was asked to take the bill from the Speaker's table and disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Objection was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] unless an amendment which he proposed was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is incorrect.

Mr. SIMS. I mean the objection of the gentleman from Illinois—I want to state it correctly.

Mr. MANN. Of course. I would not interrupt the gentleman if I did not know that he wanted to state it correctly.

Mr. SIMS. I know that. The gentleman's suggestion was that we concur in all the Senate amendments except such as were then specified by the gentleman from Illinois. That suggestion was agreed to, and the bill was passed in that way. The House concurred in all the Senate amendments except such as were named by the gentleman from Illinois. Therefore the bill went back to the Senate with the Crawford amendment agreed to by this House. I am satisfied, however, that the chairman of the committee, Mr. GREGG, did not know about it at the time, because the bill was not read in the House, and the effect of that amendment was, as has been decided by the Court of Claims, not only to prevent the further consideration by the Court of Claims of war claims that might be sent to it under the Bowman and Tucker Acts hereafter, but absolutely to dismiss from the court's calendar several thousand claims that had already been sent there by the action of the House and Senate, in a number of which cases the proof had already been taken in that court.

Now, you have practically no use for the War Claims Committee itself unless we are going to repeal that Senate amendment in toto and restore to the dockets of the Court of Claims those claims which have been dismissed by the court as a result of that amendment. That is the only way in which they can be further considered by the court. Not only do we have no use for Mr. Holloway or anybody to take his place, but we have practically no use for the Committee on War Claims itself, unless that amendment be repealed, because I know from long experience that this House is not going to pass war claims that have not been passed upon by the Court of Claims or some other body that gives an impartial consideration and report on the facts and the law.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Was it not the intention simply to stop the referring of any more war claims to the Court of Claims, but not to stop the consideration and jurisdiction by the Court of Claims of the claims that had already been referred and in which testimony had been taken?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer what was the intention of the Senate, except from what appears in the act. This same amendment, word for word, was in a bill that was considered by the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. LEE, the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Morse, and myself, the House conferees in the Sixty-second Congress, which we refused to agree to, as well as numerous other amendments, and killed the bill; and if this bill had taken the same course, if the House had not concurred in the Crawford amendment, without even knowing that it was in the bill, several thousand claims would now be on the calendar of the Court of Claims which have been dismissed as the result of that amendment. I believe Senator Crawford knew what he was doing when he drew that amendment, and that it would have the effect which it has had, because I was on the conference committee with the Senator in which there was a controversy over this provision in a former bill.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will give me credit for knowing what I was doing.

Mr. SIMS. I have no doubt that the gentleman not only knew what he was doing, but intended what he was doing. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Tennessee was on the War Claims Committee for 14 years.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman think it would be the fair thing for us to permit the Court of Claims to proceed with the consideration of claims that Congress has referred to them and in which they have taken testimony, in which the parties have introduced their evidence, and to conclude those cases, and then let the statute of limitations prevent the further consideration of additional claims?

Mr. SIMS. I must admit that it is not only fair, but it is right and proper; but until we pass a bill repealing the Crawford amendment we have practically no use for the Committee on War Claims; and unless we do pass it, war claims, practically, are dead for all time to come. I know that in order to secure an immediate appropriation for the payment of the claims that were then in the omnibus war-claims bill some Senators were willing to dismiss every other claim from the Court of Claims, that Senators themselves in part had sent there, and which the committees of this House had sent there, and I want the country to know what I am satisfied is a fact, that neither the chairman of the Committee on War Claims nor any member of it—though I was not a member of it at that time—knew anything about the amendment. I was a conferee on a former bill which we refused to agree to, and we let the bill die rather than put such a piece of injustice upon those claimants who had filed their claims and employed lawyers and taken their proof. Now these claimants find themselves turned out of doors. In other words, by accepting this amendment we repudiated our own action. I want to call attention to this matter, because I intend to introduce a bill to repeal that part of the Senate amendment and restore the claims to the court in the same condition that they were when they were dismissed. The reason I feel satisfied that the members of the committee, as well as all other Members, did not know of the Crawford amendment is that the bill with the Senate amendments was not read, as it was not necessary to read it in order to disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference, which was the request made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG], the chairman of the committee, and therefore no neglect of duty by him or any Member of the House can be charged, as it was late at night, and to have read a long bill of several hundred pages would have made it impossible to get the bill into conference at all and would have defeated it most effectually.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] who has just taken his seat showed to a certain extent the great injustice that was done by what was known as the Crawford amendment. He said that he was going to introduce a bill to remedy the evil and to restore to the Court of Claims those claims which had already been referred by this House, and that were then pending in the court. I wish to inform the House that that bill has already been introduced, and the purpose is to press it and to permit the court to hear and pass upon the cases that were already pending before it, and also the cases that were referred to the Court of Claims in the last Congress without objection from anyone.

Mr. DUPRÉ. How about future cases?

Mr. GREGG. It will take care of all of them. Gentlemen seem to think that there is no use for this employee. I want to explain that the use is greater than it ever was, because if the Court of Claims can not consider these claims, then the Committee on War Claims has got to consider them, and the burden on the committee is increased from ten to fifty fold.

I call attention to another fact showing the necessity for this clerk. There had not been any war-claim bill passed for 12 years until the last Congress passed a bill. That raised the interest throughout the country. The committee has received letters from everywhere—the North, from the West, from the East, and from the South. All of these letters require a courteous and full answer. When Mr. Holloway was there he had been on the committee 39 years, and when these letters of inquiry came all we had to do was to turn them over to him. He had the whole thing in his mind by reason of his long connection with the committee. Now letters of inquiry are coming, the number having increased from five to ten fold. Not having Mr. Holloway to aid us, we have to make a separate independent investigation in each case in order to intelligently and fairly answer these inquiries. The help we have in that committee, with that additional burden placed upon them, is not sufficient to do this work. We have got to have somebody who can make this independent thorough investigation, so that we can give the people a courteous and intelligent answer to their letters of inquiry. Every man who writes to that committee is entitled to a courteous and fair answer and is entitled to the information that he asks for.

As I said, if Mr. Holloway was living, all we would have to do would be to ask him and he could furnish the information. Now every letter of inquiry calls for a separate independent investigation, and to answer courteously and intelligently the letters, as we should, is impossible, because we have not the help to do it.

We only ask for it—the resolution only provides for it—for the first session of this Congress. We want to be prepared to answer all of these letters. If any of your constituents write us a letter about any claim, we want to be prepared to answer it intelligently, courteously, and within a reasonable time, and with the help that we now have we can not do it.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Texas a question in reference to this matter? Has this digest of war claims been kept down to date?

Mr. GREGG. During the last year or two Mr. Holloway's health has been so bad that it has not, and we have quite a lot of that work to bring up.

Mr. MANN. Is it possible for any Member of the House to send to the Committee on War Claims and obtain any information about a war claim?

Mr. GREGG. It is; we furnish pretty full information, but we can not furnish all information; that is, we do not have the time to answer everything, not having the benefit of Mr. Holloway's information and knowledge. It takes a separate and independent investigation.

Mr. MANN. I am glad that the gentleman makes the statement, and I hope his desire may be complied with. I never myself was able to obtain any information from the Committee on War Claims about any claim, either under a Republican or a Democratic administration. I try to keep track of these war claims. I keep the files when they come from the committee and from the Court of Claims.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GREGG. I want to say to the gentleman that so far as I know, no request that he has ever made of that committee has been unanswered. I will gladly give him full and courteous information to every inquiry he makes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, that goes without saying. When I wanted to obtain information from the Committee on War Claims I did not go through the form of writing a letter. I had my secretary telephone to the committee, but I never yet got any information from it.

I keep track of the war claims, and I think it is advisable that the committee should have some one who keeps a digest of war claims to date, at least for the benefit of the members of the committee or the chairman of the committee, if not for the benefit of other Members.

Gentlemen have made reference to the action of the last Congress concerning the so-called Crawford amendment. Personally I think the method of referring war claims to the Court of Claims is very objectionable. I would constitute somewhere in the Government an authority which could dispose of these claims. We refer claims to the Court of Claims for findings of fact and conclusions and recommendations, and frequently it has happened that the Court of Claims has reported that a claim ought not to be paid, but specified the amount involved, and then the claim appeared in an omnibus bill to be paid in conformity with the report of the Committee on Claims. If the Court of Claims renders a judgment we pay it as a matter of course in the deficiency bill, but when the Court of Claims has made a finding it is only the beginning of the controversy. I would constitute somewhere, in some way, an authority which could pass upon these matters and have the judgment of that authority taken as final and the Congress make an appropriation when an appropriation was demanded.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat amused at my friends on the other side of the aisle, the distinguished former chairman of the Committee on War Claims, who rendered great service to the House and the country as chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. SIMS, and the distinguished present chairman, who has rendered great service to the country, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. GREGG, who admit that in the last Congress they knew nothing about the matters that they were voting upon.

We had passed an omnibus war-claims bill which we sent to the Senate. That body added several hundred amendments to it. It came over here in the last 24 or possibly 18 hours of the session. I obtained a copy with all the work I had to do in the House of every one of those Senate amendments and examined every one of them. The chairman of the committee said that he did not know what they were. It is strange—more than passing strange—that the leader of the minority, busy on the floor of the House, would have the time and the opportunity and take the occasion to obtain the Senate amendments, examine them, and see whether in his judgment the amendments ought to pass, but that the chairman of the committee, the former chairman of the committee, all the members of the committee on the minority side should have neither the opportunity, the occasion, nor the foresight to find out what the Senate amendments were, and yet propose to agree to them.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen sought to send the bill to conference and that I objected. I had been over the amendments. I supposed the gentleman on the other side had been equally careful and that they had examined them. I stated to the gentlemen privately, and afterwards publicly in the House, that as far as I was concerned I was willing that certain Senate amendments should be agreed to if the House would disagree to the other amendments—and I indicated each amendment by number—with the understanding, also previously obtained, that the Senate would ratify our action. Thereupon they agreed to an amendment which they all say is vicious and bad. I do not think it is good faith on the part of the majority to enter into an agreement of that kind and then, the first crack out of the box, seek to repudiate what they agreed to. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Delaware, Mr. MILLER, a member of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MILLER of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, the only reason that I rise is to say, speaking for the minority members of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. HEATON] and myself, that we were present at the meeting of the Committee on Accounts when this matter was considered. It was the only resolution that was before us that was the cause of considerable discussion, and I might say that it was amended to provide for this clerk only until the end of the present session of Congress rather than for the whole Congress, as the resolution originally was introduced. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] gave us the same explanation that he has given the House to-day, and it was brought out in the discussion before the committee that the salary of Mr. Holloway is now included in the legislative, judicial, and executive act, which expires on June 30 of next year. The money is already appropriated. This resolution, as will be seen, provides for the payment of this clerk out of the contingent fund of the House until the end of the present session, which, of course, will probably extend beyond June 30 of next year. I only wanted to substantiate what the chairman of the committee has said and the gentleman from Texas has said, namely, that they need this man over there, and only ask for him until the end of the present session. I am speaking for the minority members of the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I concur with the gentleman from Tennessee, that the House did a substantial injustice in adopting the Crawford amendment, having the far-reaching effect of dismissing claims that this House had already referred to the Court of Claims, of which the Court of Claims had taken jurisdiction, in which the claimants had been invited and, in fact, compelled to submit evidence, and in which the examiners of the Government had gone into various portions of the United States to take evidence.

It seems to me that it must have been a matter of inadvertence that at that stage of the proceedings we passed a bill dismissing the claims. I can understand how there may be a time when the statute of limitations ought to run against the beginning of new proceedings, but the faith of the United States ought to be pledged to pay the claims that we have submitted to the Court of Claims.

I agree in part with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there ought to be in the Court of Claims power to adjudicate these claims, and not to make a mere recommendation and finding of facts which can be acted upon or not by this Congress. There ought to be a final judgment rendered against the United States in the case of such claims as are found just. It seems to me it is more dignified, proper, and just for the United States to submit to a tribunal of justice the validity of a claim and have the claimant prove by his evidence the existence of the right, and pay the debt, than it is to have that kind of claim established before a committee. The difficulty of having this thing thrown back again into a committee of Congress is this: Some gentleman presents a claim which he says his father suffered, possibly during the Civil War, and he thinks the claim is for a thousand dollars or $5,000 or $10,000. He honestly thinks this, but when he comes to submit his claim to the arbitrament of a court of justice he finds it amounts to $250 or $750 or $923, or some such sum. We all know that a man sues for $5,000 and occasionally gets only $1. The Federal Government is at the mercy of that kind of evidence before its Committee on Claims, but a court of justice has its rules of evidence, by which it can test the validity of a claim. I will undertake to say, without fear of dispute, that it is almost as easy to get before a committee of Congress and get favorable consideration of a $5,000 claim as it is of a $5 claim. So that there is no way of testing the merits of a claim by the amount demanded. It depends largely on the diligence of a man who is presenting the claim. By all means, we ought to restore the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and we ought to make it finally conclusive, and when those claims are adjudicated against the United States we ought to pay them.

The difficulty was that in the Sixty-second Congress we passed an omnibus claims bill, as I recollect. It went to another body, and there a number of claims were added in the nature of the French spoliation claims. This House would not submit to the payment of those French spoliation claims, and the whole bill failed, regardless of the merits of claims that had been adjudicated by the Court of Claims. In the Sixty-third Congress we did the same thing. Gentlemen with great industry and fidelity got up their claims bill and it went to the other body, and there some claims were annexed that were for overtime, as I recall, of certain officers of the Army, which had not been adjudicated anywhere. This House was not willing to submit to the payment of those claims, which had not been before a court of justice; and, in order to get the bill through and finally pay some very deserving claimants who had had their claims adjudicated, we finally passed the bill after eliminating all the objectionable amendments that we could.

Now, we did not eliminate this particular Crawford amendment which was objectionable. We might have done so, and possibly we should have done so, even at the risk of the failure of the bill. But those claims against the United States ought to have been paid and were honestly paid by that bill and should have been disposed of. The bills which have been referred by this House to the Court of Claims and have been in the process of adjudication there should be completed, and, when completed, they should be finally paid.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG].

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I can not sit quietly by and hear the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois state that we did not know what was in that bill. I want to say to you that we did know and we acted advisedly. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who was the ranking member, and would have been one of the conferees on the committee, and I went to the Senate. We saw the Senate members who would have been conferees, and we discussed this very provision, and we were informed by the Senate members that the bill would be defeated if we did not accept that amendment. Remember, that that Congress had to adjourn on the 4th of March. This was between 12 and 1 o'clock of the night of the 3d of March, and we had no time. We were assured by the Senators that Mr. Crawford would filibuster against the bill and defeat it. The time was so short that we knew he could do it without any trouble, and so we accepted it advisedly, relying upon the fairness of this House to repeal it at this session of Congress.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I stated I did not think the gentleman knew, by reason of the fact that it was not read in the House.

Mr. GREGG. We read it.

Mr. SIMS. I stand corrected. I did not know the gentleman had done that. I know that I did not know anything about it.

Mr. GREGG. Here is the position, gentlemen. There were 1,100 claims in that bill against which nobody had any objection. They had been passed upon by the Court of Claims, the amounts had been adjudicated, and the loyalty of the claimants had been established by the court. Those people had been trying for 50 years to get the money that the Government fairly owed them; and the prospects were that if we did not agree to that amendment and let that bill pass those 1,100 claimants would have been denied their just demands against this Government. And knowing that and realizing that——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREGG (continuing). We agreed knowingly to that amendment rather than to make those 1,100 people suffer any longer.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I represent a district which is very much interested in the matter under discussion. During my service in this House I have sent 40 or 50 war claims to the Court of Claims for investigation and report. The claimants employed their attorneys. They have spent some time and not a little money procuring evidence to be submitted to the court, and on the adjournment of the last Congress I ascertained for the first time that this House had agreed to an amendment offered in the Senate practically throwing out of that court these identical claims. None of us had any information in this House of this proposed plan except the members of the War Claims Committee who were dealing with the Senate amendment. We were in absolute ignorance of it. There never was a statement made on the floor of the House or an intimation that we were going to commit ourselves to this unjust and unfair action which is a denial of justice to claimants whose cases we have submitted to a court in order that that court might submit a finding to this House. When I returned home I had to admit that Congress had passed such a bill without the knowledge on the part of the Members of this House, except the members of the Committee on War Claims and perhaps a half dozen others, of what they were doing in the closing hours of that session.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen of the House will observe there has been no objection to the passage of this resolution; that this discussion has been on another subject altogether. I think there can be no question about the merit of the resolution. Mr. Holloway, if he had lived, would have drawn the salary during the vacation. No one has drawn any salary for this service, although it was provided for by law since July last. If Mr. Holloway had lived there would have been no necessity for any resolution of any kind and he would have drawn his salary to the 30th day of June, 1916. I ask for the question.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LLOYD. Now, the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The resolution as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, OIL CITY, PA.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, there lies on the Speaker's table a bill (S. 696) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Allegheny River at Oil City, Pa. It passed the Senate on the 16th. A similar bill has been prepared by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I ask to have the Senate bill taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent. It is automatic.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is correct.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill (S. 696), which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 696) authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., a railroad corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Pennsylvania, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in Oil City, county of Venango, and State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill of a similar tenor will be ordered to lie on the table.

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution No. 60 and consider the Senate amendment in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House joint resolution No. 60, with a Senate amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 60) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, with Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let the Clerk read the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, that is not the question, although I have no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for its immediate consideration in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Has the request already been granted to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asked that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me a little time?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall make a statement explaining it first.

Mr. Speaker, some time about the 1st of July a bomb was exploded at the Senate end of the Capitol, doing some damage to the building. The situation was such that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate took up with the Superintendent of the Capitol the question of providing in some way for additional watch service for the Capitol Building. The Superintendent of the Capitol arranged to carry on certain pay rolls, out of certain appropriations under his charge, 16 additional watchmen, at the compensation of $60 per month. He did it upon condition that the captain of the Capitol police should personally select the men, and after they had been selected they were sent to the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, in order that he might be satisfied that they were physically and otherwise qualified for the police duties to which they were to be assigned.

The men were appointed about the 5th of July and carried on the appropriations under the control of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds until the 15th of December. The total expenditure was $5,250. One-third of the sum was charged to the appropriation for the maintenance and repair of the Capitol Building, one-third to the maintenance of the House Office Building, and one-third to the maintenance of the Senate Office Building. The condition of the appropriations did not permit the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds to have any additional expense for this purpose charged against his appropriations after the 15th of December. I am informed that the men originally selected are still performing the service.

There are provided by the legislative act 47 privates, 3 lieutenants, and 1 captain of police. The privates receive $1,050 per annum, and they, with the 16 additional privates, at $720 a year, making a total of 67 employees, are now performing the duty of policing the Capitol and the two office buildings.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will wait until I finish a statement of what has been done, I shall be glad to yield. I wish to have a complete statement.

In the Sixty-second Congress there were dropped from the Capitol police force 1 lieutenant, at $1,200, and 34 privates, at $1,050 each; 35 employees, at a total annual compensation of $36,900. In the first session of the Sixty-third Congress there were added 1 lieutenant, at $1,200, and 14 privates, at $1,050 each, or 15 employees, at the total annual compensation of $15,900. The net reduction from the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress was 20 employees, with a total annual compensation of $21,000.

The Senate added in the pending bill 16 employees, at $720 each, which leaves a net reduction from the Sixty-second Congress of 4 employees, with a total compensation of $9,480.

I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I do not know whether the gentleman can give the information I was seeking. How many of these police are on duty at the same time? They are in three shifts, are they, of eight hours?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; three shifts.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. You say there are 40 or 50 of them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Fifty-one, including both the office buildings.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Can the gentleman tell how many of them were on duty at the time this bomb was exploded?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I have not the information.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The gentleman would not know whether there was one or anyone?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no information on the question. If they were equally divided in three shifts, it would give 16 privates on each shift to police the House Office Building and the Capitol and the Senate Office Building.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. How many?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sixteen for each shift, if the number of men were equally divided in three shifts. That would make 16 men, if that is the way the division is made. I am not certain, but I believe there are more on duty during the day, when more persons are in the Capitol, but I am not positive about it.

Mr. Speaker, the Sergeant at Arms of the two Houses, in view of what happened, are of the opinion that it is highly important that these additional men should be employed for the balance of the fiscal year. If any accident should occur and the Congress denied to those officials the additional help that they insist is essential properly to police the Capitol Building, they would justify themselves from liability on the ground that the Congress had declined to furnish the force necessary to enable them to do the work. If we give them the force which they say is required properly to police the Capitol Building, then we can hold those in charge of the work rigorously to account in the event of any untoward accident. For that reason I submit the motion to agree to the Senate amendment, in order to test the wish of the House regarding the matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is very likely that we need the additional Capitol police. I do not know whether the gentlemen who have already been employed by the Superintendent of the Capitol are to fill these places or not. The police are appointed, I believe, by the Sergeant at Arms, one-half from the House and one-half from the Senate, and if we add to the number of Capitol policemen, probably the desire for pie will result in the appointment of new men, unless the patronage committee on the other side have already selected the men who were employed last summer.

Four years ago our Democratic friends, having obtained a majority in the House, came in with great professions of economy. They held a caucus and decided to abolish a lot of the places in the House, most of which have since been restored. Among the other places they proposed to abolish were quite a number of the Capitol police. Under the leadership of that distinguished and able Member of the House, Mr. Palmer, of Pennsylvania, they determined to abolish the number of the Capitol police and other offices. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Palmer, has since been rewarded by the administration, which appreciated his proper efforts for economy, though, I think, they were never fully appreciated even on that side of the House. [Laughter.] But right after the Democratic caucus the House considered and passed this resolution:

That the provisions in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation acts approved June 17, 1910, and March 4, 1911, making appropriations for the Capitol police, are hereby amended by reducing the number of lieutenants from 3 to 2, by reducing the number of privates from 67 to 33, and by reducing the total appropriation for the Capitol police to such sums as may be necessary.

That was the result of caucus action on the Democratic side of the House. Mr. Roddenbery, of Georgia, had charge of the resolution reported from the Committee on Accounts, and on May 26, 1911, he said:

Mr. Speaker, this resolution completes, or is designed to complete, the caucus action of the majority on the 1st of April. The caucus action and the report of the committee favored the abolition of 34 private policemen of the Capitol force and 1 lieutenant of the Capitol police, and the joint resolution seeks to carry into effect this resolution by reducing the number of lieutenants from 3 to 2 and by reducing the number of privates from 67 to 33, and we submit this resolution for the purpose of executing this mandate of the caucus.

Now it is proposed, by unanimous consent, with no Member on the Democratic side objecting—and any one of them could have stopped this—to override the action of the Democratic caucus. When they took this action four years ago they advertised all over the country, "Here we show you our economy. Here are some Republican policemen on the force, and we propose to discharge them."

We told the Democrats at the time that they would in the end, when they learned more, increase the police force and restore those various offices which they were then abolishing. Now it is proposed to do it, not by a contest in the House, but by unanimous consent. The only real economist that the House ever had on the Democratic side—barring the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]—was Mr. Palmer, of Pennsylvania; and his constituents having dispensed with his services, there is nobody left over there to speak for economy. [Laughter.] No one objects to this "gross extravagance," as you described it four years ago, and I do not wonder. Since that time the country has learned that, whatever else may be expected or received from Democratic control, economy never will be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois is in error. This amendment is not to be agreed to by unanimous consent. It will be agreed to, if at all, by the House upon a vote. I expect the gentleman from Illinois and quite a number of other gentlemen on that side of the House will vote to adopt the Senate amendment.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did not the gentleman bring it before the House by unanimous consent?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I brought it before the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Could not anyone have prevented it by objecting?

Mr. FITZGERALD. He could have prevented its consideration to-day, but that would simply have delayed it until to-morrow, when the committee could have reported it.

Mr. MANN. But when nobody objects, that shows that there is no objection to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a particular reason for it. No one on this side of the House will object to a resolution at this time increasing the force of the Capitol police. There are so many more Republicans in this Congress than in the last one that more police are necessary around the Capitol. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Then you had better increase the number for the next Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the next Congress there will be so few Republicans upon that side that we can then dispense with a large number of the Capitol police; so that it is very apparent to everyone in the House that no one will object to the consideration of the resolution.

The fact is that everyone is familiar with existing conditions, and the responsibility is upon the House itself to determine whether it is the part of wisdom at this time to provide these 16 additional men to police these three buildings from now until the 30th of June. If they be continued it will give 67 men to do all of the watch and police service in the two office buildings and the Capitol during the time Congress is in session. As I am somewhat solicitous for my own welfare, I intend to vote for the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. In view of the statement of the gentleman that they were increasing the number of Capitol police because of the increased number on the Republican side, I should like to ask the gentleman, as we are going to have a new Member on the Republican side in the person of Mr. Hicks when next we meet, the court of appeals of his State having decided that Mr. Hicks is elected, whether the gentleman from New York does not want to increase the number of the Capitol police beyond that now proposed?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, Mr. Speaker, if every time a Republican Member is added to the membership on that side of the House it becomes necessary to add four or five policemen to the Capitol police force, I will not be the one to stand in the way of the proper policing of the Capitol; and if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will give me his personal assurance at this time that the fact that the gentleman from the first district of New York, who will receive a certificate more or less permanent, and will take his seat on that side of the House, will necessitate a further addition to the Capitol police force, I shall be glad to modify the motion which I have offered, and to offer one to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment increasing the police force to such a number as the gentleman from Illinois may think will be adequate.

Mr. MANN. I will give the gentleman the assurance that when we meet again we will have one increase of Members on this side of the House and not on that side.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not take that unction to my soul, because his term on that side of the House may not be of sufficient duration to give much joy to the gentleman from Illinois and his colleagues, from what I have been informed are the facts in the case.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt the gentleman from New York hastily says that he is willing to override the decision of the Supreme Court in New York, the decision of the appellate division of the Supreme Court in New York, and the decision of the court of appeals in New York; but I imagine that there will be some Members on the majority side of the House who will pay some attention to the decisions of the courts in the gentleman's own State, although he is not permitted to make it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman need not worry that the decisions of the courts of the State of New York will not be properly honored in this House. The only thing decided by the courts in the State, so far as the facts are concerned, is that upon certain facts as presented a Republican candidate was entitled to have denied an application to stay further the issuance of a certificate of election. The difference in the vote as reported thus far is three. The Democratic candidate has been struggling ever since the congressional election to have counted in the courts of the State the ballots that were cast at the election, but his attempts to have them counted in a judicial tribunal has been resisted at every stage by his Republican opponent.

What I have to say is this: That when these ballot boxes are opened and the ballots are counted, whichever way an honest and impartial review of them will show the result to be, this side of the House will acquiesce in it. It will not be like those early days which I experienced in this House, when all that was necessary for a man to do was to come to this Chamber claiming a seat on the Republican side and submit a contest and be assured of a seat. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

However, we will settle the election case some other time. I may add that the fact that I was willing to assume a position where I should be free to criticize decisions of the courts of my State perhaps has taken away from me some of the awe with which the gentleman from Illinois looks upon those distinguished tribunals.

Mr. MANN. I do not propose to discuss the election case now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not wish or intend what I say to be construed as meaning that this side of the House has any intention, in any way, of doing an act that will not be strictly in accordance with the rights of the contestants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have been long enough in the House and have known the gentleman from New York long enough to distinguish between his serious remarks and his facetious partisan remarks, and I never take them seriously. I made a facetious reference to the gentleman from New York a moment ago showing that I had knowledge that he had been defeated for election as judge in the State of New York. I think that his election to any position outside of this body would have been a distinct loss, not only to this body but to the country at large. [Applause.] If he had been elected judge, I would not think that he should be judged by some of his remarks this morning on election cases, because he would have made an able, impartial judge, as good as any who ever had sat upon the bench. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is such compliments as that that made my campaign very embarrassing and instructive. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate amendment was agreed to was laid on the table.

REPORT OF THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 425).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting the report of the Industrial Commission. It is a very lengthy document and, unless there is some special reason for reading it, it will be referred to the Committee on Labor. [After a pause.] The Chair refers it to the Committee on Labor and orders it printed.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

That of the report of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, including all the testimony taken at its hearings, 10,000 additional copies be printed, bound, and distributed in the usual manner through the folding rooms of the House and Senate, and that of the final report of the said commission 200,000 additional copies be printed and bound and likewise distributed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a resolution which requires unanimous consent? It is not privileged under the rule.

Mr. LEWIS. It is relevant to that very subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear any gentleman on the point of order, which seems never to have been settled since the rules of the House have been changed. In the ordinary course of business the reports are referred by the Speaker and ordered printed or not, as the case may be; that is done practically by unanimous consent. This is not a committee of the House, not even a commission of the House. It was a separate and independent commission, and the Chair is very much in doubt as to what his own procedure ought to be in it.

Mr. BARNHART. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARNHART. It is an established rule of the House, in any event, as I understand it, that any request for printing coming before the Congress must be accompanied by an estimate of costs of the same, together with a showing of the amount appropriated for printing and the amount already expended. Am I right about that?

Mr. LEWIS. We have the estimate here ready to submit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is correct.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to be heard, Mr. Speaker, on this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear all gentlemen. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Maryland is a privileged motion. What the gentleman from Maryland is doing, or ought to be doing, at present is asking for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short statement.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to make a statement myself. As to whether additional copies of this report should be printed I do not wish to express any opinion at this time. I do not know. The Industrial Commission had, all told, if I recollect correctly, an appropriation of $450,000, and in the last appropriation of $100,000 made for the commission it was provided that the commission should complete its work by a certain date and should do all of its printing, including the printing of its final report, with the funds that had been made available. Whether additional copies of the report or of some things that have not been printed should be printed, I am not in a position to say, because I do not know; but I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, in view of what I do know about what happened when the appropriation was made, that the printing be done and that the final report should be paid for out of that appropriation; that at least some committee of the House having proper jurisdiction should report the resolution providing for any additional printing. Under the rule all resolutions excepting certain ones of a privileged character can be introduced only through the basket and are referred to the appropriate committees. There is no provision in the rules making privileged a resolution to print copies of any report for distribution. Either the objection that it is not in order or a demand for the regular order prevents consideration. The importance of the matter is this, Mr. Speaker. Whatever is printed now is charged against the congressional allotment for printing. A few years ago an investigation disclosed that there was great abuse in the sending to Congress of all sorts of reports and documents to be printed and charged against the congressional allotments which should have been paid for out of specific appropriations made for printing for various public services of the Government.

One law to which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] has referred requires all orders for printing to contain certain detailed information regarding the cost of the printing of the document, and such information is usually included in the reports of the Committee on Printing, so that the House, with information of the character of document to be printed, could determine whether it was wise to expend the sum required for any particular document. It seems to me that this resolution provides for an extraordinary number of copies of some portion of the proceedings—some two hundred thousand copies. My recollection is that outside of the edition of the horse book, which at various times is provided for distribution by Congress, there never has been an authorization by Congress for the printing of such a large edition of any document; and I doubt very much whether any considerable portion of the 200,000 copies would ever be read. I believe this matter should be considered by the Committee on Printing and that that committee should report a resolution providing for the printing of additional copies of the reports which have already been printed or of some portion of the proceedings which have not been printed, with a detailed statement required by the rule as to the cost of printing, and a recommendation of what should be done. For that reason I make the point of order, because if this other practice be followed, that every time a report is transmitted here from elsewhere, the House should, without the information it should have, adopt resolutions providing for an extraordinary number of copies, it would be absolutely impossible ever to gauge the amount of money that would be required for the congressional printing.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I recall it was said that there was a commission in a former Congress which had taken much of evidence and much of communication, and that the report and the accompanying documents, exhibits, and so forth, would make two carloads. I do not know as to this report, as to how extensive it is, but I understand the gentleman thinks it ought to be referred to the proper committee before the report of the exhibits are printed, or, at least before the exhibits, if they be enormous, of which I have no knowledge, should be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I understand there is a very large volume of matter. I have some requests for copies of the report, and I hope that some provision will be made for printing copies of the report, and if it be deemed advisable that some provision be made for printing the testimony. I do not know whether it is desirable to do so; I did not follow the work of the commission sufficiently to tell. But I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is unwise to provide for the printing in this way. Rule 22 provides for the manner in which petitions, memorials, resolutions, and bills of all kinds shall be introduced. The only resolutions or bills or motions that can be introduced otherwise are motions that are privileged. This resolution to print can not get before the House except by unanimous consent. There is no rule by which it can come before the House in any other way, unless reported from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] on the point of order as to whether this resolution which he offers is privileged. That is the only question before the House now.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I understand the fact to be that the Speaker in his reference of the matter has ordered it to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has withdrawn that part of it.

Mr. LEWIS. That question is raised with the other. With reference to the gentleman's point of order, to which a very small portion of his remarks, as usual, were devoted, I wish to say that I do not think the matter before the House is in the character of a resolution at all. A resolution would be joint or concurrent in character and would involve the joint action, therefore, of Congress. This is in the nature of a motion that is relevant to and is acted upon while the matter is in passage before the House. It is in the nature of a qualification of the reference of the subject matter by the Speaker himself to the Committee on Labor. It is therefore germane, and an element in the reference itself, and does not take the character of a joint or concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. How does the gentleman make it out that it is a privileged motion?

Mr. LEWIS. I think it is a privileged motion, as it merely qualifies the action of the Speaker himself in making the reference, which is in order.

The SPEAKER. The printing and reference are two separate propositions.

Mr. LEWIS. With all respect, the declaration that both propositions involve but one matter, that is an argument that amounts only to assertion. The practice of the House has been, I submit, to dispose of both as one matter.

The SPEAKER. But the distinction the gentleman fails to make is this: Executive communications that come over here are directed to the Speaker, and they are disposed of offhand; they are just referred. Everyone has heard that done time and again.

This is a report from a commission and it is addressed to the House. Now, query: Can any gentleman who wants printing done at any time offer a resolution and claim that it is privileged? It is a sort of new question since the rules have been changed.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask attention to the rule which, I think, is directly applicable to the question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has the floor. If he desires to yield, the gentleman may do so.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to get the gentleman's reference to the rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the rule of the House that is directly applicable is Rule XI, clause 51, which says:

All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House.

This certainly is an order providing for printing, and that rule is especially applicable to the situation at hand, and it should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I will.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, if we would proceed in this way it will certainly be necessary to first repeal the printing law. I quote from an extract from the printing laws, Statutes at Large, page 1012, as follows:

Either House may order the printing of a document not already provided for by existing law, but only when the same shall be accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer as to the probable cost thereof.

And paragraph 2 of that section says:

Resolutions to print extra copies, when presented in either House, shall be referred immediately to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Indiana a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Is that law lived up to? Does the Public Printer pay any attention to it whatever?

Mr. BARNHART. He ought to pay attention to it.

Mr. MANN. But, does he? The gentleman is chairman of the committee, and knows.

Mr. BARNHART. Ordinarily, yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the Public Printer ever refuse to print documents of either House of Congress?

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I would like to state, gentlemen, the House did violate that law on Wednesday of this week——

Mr. MANN. They do it every day.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Because they did order printing done by unanimous consent. It seems to me that every Member of this House knows there is an urgent demand from the laboring people of this country for the printing of this report.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. And farmers, too.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. And farmers, too, as suggested by my friend from Texas [Mr. DAVIS]. And is it true that these objections are only raised when this matter is wanted by the great masses of the people? I will say to you that this will be printed. You may delay it if you desire, but this report is going to be printed. The people are not going to be denied such an important report as this when there is such a great demand for it.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman from Maryland permit?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, I would like to call the attention of the House to this fact: I am not saying that I am opposed to the printing of this report, but before it is peremptorily ordered we ought to know something about existing conditions.

As stated by the gentleman from New York, this commission was given an appropriation of $450,000 to conduct this work. The sundry civil bill of 1915 provided an appropriation of $100,000 to be available for necessary printing, including the final report of this commission.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. BARNHART. I want to answer the gentleman's question, and then I will yield.

Mr. KEATING. But from that point of view——

Mr. BARNHART. I wish to finish my statement. The probability is that the commission, as a good many other commissions have done, and which is not infrequently done by departments, has exceeded its financial authority. And then it comes to the Congress and asks by a resolution calling for unanimous consent to be given this appropriation.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BARNHART. No. I want to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The commission says it printed 10,000 copies of its final report. Two copies of each were allotted to each Member of Congress. That is a total of 25 copies to each congressional district. I wonder how many of you Members of the House have written to the commission and been advised that they have no copies for distribution? Ten thousand copies were printed, and where are they?

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a question of much importance, involving, as it will, the expenditure of, at the least calculation, $100,000; that some committee of the House—and, I assure you, I do not want the duty to devolve upon me—should make an investigation and see what the Industrial Commission did with this $100,000 which was given, as I am informed, for its printing. And until that has been done, any Member of the House offering a protest against a full investigation of the matter is certainly not within the bounds of proper precedent; but it is his duty to do so in behalf of the welfare of the people, who want these reports. There ought to be something in that resolution providing for the distribution of these reports; it does not carry a word of that kind; and I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order ought to be sustained and that the matter ought to come up in the regular way. If it comes to the Committee on Printing, the gentleman from Maryland may be assured that he will be given the largest and most impartial hearing possible, so far as the chairman of the committee is concerned.

Mr. LEWIS and Mr. KEATING rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has the floor on the point of order, and nobody has touched the point of order in the last 30 minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] is recognized.

Mr. KEATING. If the Speaker will bear with me for just a moment, I desire to reply to the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART]. Anybody who knows the gentleman from Indiana knows that he would not misrepresent any individual or any commission, and especially a commission appointed by the Government; and yet unfortunately in his quotation he has done the Commission on Industrial Relations a grave injustice, and I am sure that when I call the facts to the attention of the gentleman he will be the very first to make a correction.

He has stated to this House that in the sundy civil appropriation bill $100,000 was set aside for the specific purpose, as he quoted it, of providing for "all necessary printing, including the final report of the commission"; but the gentleman did not quote the entire provision. The memorandum prepared by some one and submitted to the gentleman, upon which he based this statement, is incorrect, because this is what the $100,000 was appropriated for. Permit me to quote from the sundry civil bill as it passed the House:

For completing the inquiries and investigations authorized by the act of August 23, 1912, entitled "An act to create a Commission on Industrial Relations" and to provide the expenses of such inquiries and investigations as are enumerated in section 2 of said act and for all necessary printing, including the final report of the commission, $100,000, to be immediately available.

The commission so expended the money. The commission conducted the investigations just as it told the Committee on Appropriations it would conduct the investigations, and an examination of the hearings, which contain a statement by Chairman Walsh of exactly what he intended to do with the $100,000, or, rather, with the $140,000 that he requested, will reveal the fact that he never intimated that he intended to print the evidence with this money. He carried out his exact contract and his instructions under this appropriation bill. He did pay for the necessary printing for the commission and he did print the final report of the commission, and 10,000 copies have been made available. Those are the facts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to hear anybody arguing the merits of the case. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has anything to say about this point of order, the Chair will be glad to hear it.

Mr. LEWIS. I have one further suggestion to offer that may bear upon it. The joint resolution itself, constituting the Industrial Commission, reading from section 3, provides that—

Said commission may report to Congress its findings and recommendations and submit the testimony taken from time to time, and shall make its final report, accompanied by the testimony not previously submitted.

The SPEAKER. Now, that has been done.

Mr. LEWIS. That has been done on their part, but it seems to me the purpose and implication in that clause clearly requires a printing, because, practically speaking, their report and the testimony can not be submitted to this or any other human body unless it is printed. That is a physical fact, and however astute the economist of the House, he can not meet it with an answer. Those reports can not be intelligibly submitted to the Congress except in print, therefore the implication of existing law is that they shall be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman why he makes that statement that it can not be printed. Information came to the Speaker as to the bulk of this report and the evidence, and inquiry was made as to what to do with it, and somebody suggested that it be brought in here. There was not room enough in the well of the House for it, and the Chair ordered it not brought in. It is out in the lobby, and if anybody wants to inspect it, he can go out there and see it. [Laughter.]

Now, the only question is whether or not this resolution which the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] offers here is a privileged resolution. If it is, we will consider it here now. If it is not, you can not consider except by unanimous consent; and while this thing is a sort of big thing in itself, that is not the largest part of it. It sets a precedent for what shall be done about printing matters hereafter.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest that the argument presented is a sound as well as a sincere argument. It is true, perhaps, that in a sense it may be said that the report of the testimony is submitted when it is placed in the custody of the Speaker, but it is not actually presented to the Congress. The Speaker is only the technical conduit through which it may be submitted to the Congress. The actual submission to a Congress that operates through its brains, and not through technical inference, requires that it be printed that it can actually be considered by the Members of this House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. MANN. Does the law require that the commission shall submit this to Congress?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Then, if the gentleman's argument is correct, it is the duty of the commission to print it.

Mr. LEWIS. They have tried to submit it to the Congress, and they have put it in the conduit through which all reports must be submitted to the Congress.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman states that it is printed, his argument falls to the ground.

Mr. LEWIS. The testimony is not printed.

Mr. MANN. If they have submitted the testimony as the law requires the submission of the testimony it must be printed, and it is not our duty to submit it to Congress.

Mr. LEWIS. I think the gentleman will give greater aid to this discussion by endeavoring to understand the point I am making.

Mr. MANN. I did understand it, and I exploded it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman exploded himself, but not the point. [Laughter.] Now, I submit to anyone in this House whether a matter of this kind, containing 7,000 pages of testimony, can be submitted to the understanding of this House without printing. If that inference be a sound inference, then there is an existing law upon which the Speaker's original ruling in this matter automatically ordering it printed may be sustained, and under these circumstances I think the first ruling of the Speaker ordering it printed should be sustained.

I would like, in connection with my remarks, to submit a letter from Prof. Manly——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that he has not had the remotest idea of ordering the testimony printed, himself. The House has an absolute right to order the whole thing printed.

Mr. LEWIS. I should like, if the House will permit, to submit a letter upon the subject by Prof. Manly, one of the principal agents of the commission, giving estimates as to the quantity of matter involved, and also an estimate of the cost of the printing, made by the chief clerk of the Public Printer.

The SPEAKER. That would not throw any light on the point of order. That would be a subsequent consideration. If the Chair should hold that this resolution is in order, why, then, this estimate would be pertinent.

Mr. LEWIS. May I inquire of the Speaker whether, if his ruling should be adverse, a motion to suspend the rules and take up this resolution would be in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. Not on this day. It would have been on Monday a week ago and it will be next Monday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in 1880 the House of Representatives adopted a rule providing—

> All documents referred to committees or otherwise disposed of shall be printed, unless otherwise specially ordered.

If that were now the rule of the House, this document, referred to a committee in the regular order, would automatically be printed. That was the rule of the House until our friends on the other side of the aisle obtained control of the House in the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. How many copies would be printed under that order to print?

Mr. MANN. It would be printed. It would be put in type, and that would cover the cost of printing in the main.

Mr. BARNHART. It would be the regular number.

Mr. MANN. It would be the regular, usual number. Now, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] were present here at the opening of the Sixty-second Congress. In the discussion of the rules of the House at that time I pointed out the fact that our friends on that side were leaving out the rule under which documents would be printed when referred to committees; but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS], my colleague from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN], and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. KEATING] all voted for the new rules, on the plea that this was reform, and the reform provided that these things shall not be printed. There is no authority of law for printing them. As a matter of fact, the Speaker, by unanimous consent of the House in reference to most of these documents which come before the House, and because of the lack of a rule on the subject, orders the documents printed. But that is a unanimous-consent proposition. An order to print must go to the Committee on Printing. I myself am inclined to think that anything anybody wants printed and that we want to make use of ought to be printed. I am very liberal about that. While I do not have the greatest confidence in the world in the Walsh Commission, that is neither here nor there. I have no doubt these documents will be printed, because there is a demand on the part of people to obtain them. This is an official report. That being the case, it will undoubtedly be printed in sufficient number. But I hope hereafter when I warn my friends on the other side of the House of these things in advance they will take the warning seriously. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, following the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I am taking this matter seriously. I understand the practice to be that when a thing is submitted to a parliamentary body, it must be put in such physical and tangible condition as to be utilized, read, and understood; and, my God, I can not understand those boxes out there in the hall. [Laughter.] Furthermore, while I am not familiar with your rules and regulations and the ruts in which you have run before, I understand this to be a very inopportune time for any man to become parsimonious or picayunish over the printing of a matter that the whole country and the whole civilized world has got its eyes on. There are more than 40,000 farmers in my State who are interested in the developments made in that investigation as to the land monopolies of Texas, and they are anxious and heart-throbbing about it, and the Federation of Labor and the bankers and business men all through the State have insisted that this report and these proceedings of this commission must be put in such tangible shape that they can get the facts and that the whole matter must be put before them. The press paraded the fact that there were two carloads of it and that it ought to be sent to the junk pile. I want to notify you right now that if there is a man from Texas who votes to have it go to the junk pile, he will meet me on the stump when he gets back to Texas in the next campaign. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. I want to know if the report of the Commission on Industrial Relations, with the accompanying testimony, has been laid before the House?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What disposition was made of it, and under what rule was that disposition made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair referred the report to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. WINGO. Did the Chair dispose of the testimony; and if so, under what rule?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The whole thing goes to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. WINGO. Under what rule did the Chair so dispose of it?

The SPEAKER. Under the ordinary rules of the House, which provide that the Chair must refer these things somewhere.

Mr. WINGO. I doubt if the Speaker catches the parliamentary inquiry I want to submit. I understand the situation to be this, that under the mandate of law the Industrial Commission has reported to Congress, not simply its report, but also the accompanying testimony?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. And pursuant to custom and the rule the Speaker has laid both before the House?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Now, does it follow, as a matter of fact, that the House can not make any disposition of either the report or the accompanying testimony, and that the Speaker is bound by some rule to exercise a discretion and refer it to some particular committee? Can not the House at that particular moment dispose of either the report or the accompanying testimony by ordering the printing, or ordering it referred to a committee for consideration looking to the printing of the testimony?

The SPEAKER. The remedy is——

Mr. MANN. Rule XXIV covers it.

Mr. WINGO. I do not understand that Rule XXIV does cover it. Here is the point I want to get at: It would be a useless practice and a useless rule for the Speaker to go through the mere mechanical performance of laying before the House a report and testimony that the law requires to be made. Now, it does occur to me that the moment the Speaker does that, any Member has the right, while it is then before the House, to make a motion for its disposition, for that is the matter which is before the House. And at the time it was laid before the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] was on his feet offering his motion to print.

The SPEAKER. But that is a distinct and separate proposition. It has nothing whatever to do with the reference.

Mr. WINGO. I am not talking about the reference, I am talking about the disposition of this testimony which the Speaker had laid before the House, and the gentleman from Maryland offered a motion to print, which, if carried, would have been a disposition of the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule. Rule XXIV, clause 2, says:

> 2. Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows: Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from heads of departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees in the same manner and with the same right of correction as public bills presented by Members.

Now, it is the universal practice under that rule for the Speaker to refer these matters, and if any gentleman thinks that the Speaker has erred in the matter, the same rules provide a way in which he can get at it. He can ask for a rereference. On the first day of this session there were 2,000 public bills introduced, and in the rush some of them were referred to the wrong committees and some of them had the names of certain Members wrong. Members came in and asked that the error be corrected and that they be rereferred.

Mr. WINGO. A further parliamentary inquiry. The Chair holds under that rule that the Speaker is limited in his action in laying the matter before the House, and that when he lays it before the House for the purpose of making a reference, under that rule the House can not dispose of the matter laid before it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not going to decide that question until it comes up.

Mr. WINGO. Is it not true that that situation has arisen inasmuch as when the Speaker laid before the House the report with the accompanying documents, the gentleman from Maryland immediately arose and offered his motion to print?

The SPEAKER. No; they have no connection with each other. The matter was completed when the Speaker referred it to the Committee on Labor.

Mr. WINGO. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make this parliamentary inquiry. Did not the gentleman from Maryland have a right to submit his motion at that time? Is it not a fact that when these reports are laid before the House the Speaker says, "without objection, it is referred"?

The SPEAKER. As a matter of fact, the Speaker was not obliged to lay the report before the House; he might have referred it without doing so, but it being a matter of great importance, he did lay it before the House.

Mr. WINGO. Then, under the rules, the House can not dispose of that until some committee presents it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not decided that; it is too late to raise the question, and we have enough on hand to decide the question raised by the gentleman from New York against the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. WINGO. I want to say to the Chair that I take this view of it—I may be wrong. This matter being brought before the House, not by the gentleman from Maryland but by the action of the Speaker in laying before the House the matter under consideration, and at that time the Speaker said he referred it to the Committee on Labor, the gentleman from Maryland offered his motion immediately.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that, but they have no connection with each other. The proposition before the House is the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], that this resolution or motion for printing offered by the gentleman from Maryland is not a privileged matter. Now, if any gentleman has an opinion about that he wants to express, and will stick to that point, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. WINGO. I desire to stick to the point, but I would like to ask the Chair at what stage of the parliamentary proceeding would the Speaker hold that a gentleman on the floor could offer a motion to dispose of the accompanying documents?

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Maryland had nothing to do with the question which the gentleman from Arkansas is talking about. He could have come in next week with his motion just as well as to-day.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman from Maryland offered his motion at the time the matter was before the House. I submit that the report was before the House when the gentleman from Maryland offered his motion. There should be a connection between the two if there is not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the gentleman's view of it.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are in danger of losing the point and strength of the proposition that was urged by the chairman of the committee [Mr. LEWIS] when we consider the question as to whether or not this is a privileged resolution. It would have been certainly within the Speaker's power, if he had chosen to do so, to have referred it to the Committee on Labor, in so far as the report was concerned, and it would have been within the province of the Speaker to refer the matter regarding the printing of the report to the Committee on Printing. But the Speaker did not do so. I say it would have been within his province to have taken that course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what authority the Speaker had to take that course.

Mr. TOWNER. Under the rules that have been quoted. A few minutes ago the Speaker said that they were separate questions, the question of printing was separate and apart from the question of the report. If that be true, it would have been within the power of the Speaker to refer to the Committee on Printing the matter regarding the printing of the report, and to the Committee on Labor the consideration of the report, but the Speaker did not do so. He refers the entire matter to the Committee on Labor, which includes, if it was not differentiated, the printing of the report, and now here is a part of the report of the committee to which the Speaker has committed the entire matter, and the chairman of the committee to which the report is committed makes a motion or recommendation as to the printing of the report.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will indulge me a moment, I think we are all confusing what is a practice by consent and what is the right of the Chair. Under the rules the Chair has no right to lay before the House this or any other report of its nature. The Chair had the right under the rules to refer this report, and the practice is for the Chair in such matters of importance, in order to inform the House, to say that the Chair lays before the House certain documents and without objection refers them to a designated committee; frequently without saying that, they are referred to such and such a committee.

The Chair sometimes goes further and orders, without objection and by consent of all Members, the printing either of the report and the accompanying documents or of part of them. But gentlemen are confusing here the practice that is concurred in by consent and the rights and privileges of the Chair. The rule expressly says that the Chair as to certain matters shall lay them before the House for the consideration of the House, and that is so in regard to certain bills that have reached certain stages, but it is not true that anywhere there can be found within the rules the right of the Chair to take such a report that comes to the Congress and submit it in the sense that it is up to the House then for consideration as to what determination shall be made of it. That is the reason the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is in error. He is confusing the ordinary practice that we concur in with the right of the Chair.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Would it not have been within the power of the Speaker, and would he not have been perhaps compelled, if the question were called to his attention, to refer the matter of printing to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not. I do not think he has any power whatever to do it except by consent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, a matter of printing in the regular way the Speaker refers in the regular way.

Mr. SHERLEY. But that is not the question of the gentleman from Iowa. The question of the gentleman from Iowa was whether when the Chair lays a matter before the House it is not then in order to have the Chair to indicate what committee shall consider the question of printing. I answered no.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, would it not be the duty of the Speaker at any time when his attention is called to this matter to have referred it to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. SHERLEY. Not at all. The gentleman seems to think that the printing of documents must follow the presentation of them to Congress.

Mr. TOWNER. No; I do not, unless it coincides, as in this case, with the report of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the Chair has only one power, and that is to refer this report to what he considered to be the proper committee, except by unanimous consent, and then, if anyone felt that that reference was improper, the rules provide a method whereby the change of reference may be made either by proper motion then or subsequently.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a report which was required to be made to Congress by the terms of the law creating the commission making the report. When it is sent to the Speaker it comes officially to him as the presiding officer of the House. The rule provides:

> Business on the Speaker's table shall be disposed of as follows:
> "Messages from the President shall be referred to the appropriate committees without debate. Reports and communications from heads of departments and other communications addressed to the House and bills, resolutions, and messages from the Senate may be referred to the appropriate committees."

This was business on the Speaker's table. I think it was his duty to lay it before the House, although the Speaker suggested that he might have referred it without reference in the House. It was "business" on the Speaker's table. The rule does not say that the Speaker shall make the reference, but the rule provides that the only thing that can be done with a communication is to refer it to a committee, or, by implication, to lay it on the table. The House can take no other action in regard to it, and as a matter of common practice the Speaker makes the reference, although it is always in order at the time to make a motion for a reference to some other committee, or afterwards to come in on the motion of a committee itself for a change of reference. This matter being on the Speaker's table and he laying it before the House, under the rules could only do the one thing by unanimous consent—refer it to the Committee on Labor. If he had offered to refer it to some other committee, the gentleman from Maryland, I think, could have made a motion that it be referred to the Committee on Labor. The question of printing is not involved in that proposition at all. While it is the practice of the Speaker on these ordinary propositions to order them printed, that is by unanimous consent only. Any gentleman can stop it if he wishes to object.

The SPEAKER. This debate on subjects not pertinent probably is not without its uses in addition to the debate on the point of order. Some gentlemen mix up the matter of the proposition of reference and the importance of these documents, and as to whether or not this resolution to print additional copies which is pending here now is privileged. If the Chair had any opinion about it, he would agree with some of these gentlemen that there is a demand for the printing of this document. Perhaps there is. The Chair has received several requests himself; but that is neither here nor there. The only question the Chair has to decide is whether this resolution of the gentleman from Maryland at this particular juncture is a privileged resolution. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in their statements have very clearly stated everything there was to be said about it, except that the phrase "the Speaker's table" is liable to mislead some people. This desk is not the Speaker's table. In the British Parliament they had a table down in front of the Speaker's stand where they put these documents, and that was literally the Speaker's table, and we still hold to the phrase, but the Speaker's table is around here almost anywhere. The clerks have these documents. The only question is whether or not this report ought to be printed and not whether we ought to print 200,000 or 500,000 copies of it, or whether it ought to be printed at all, or whether it is any good after it is printed, or whether it is the most important document that ever was printed, or whether everybody or nobody wants it.

The question is whether, under the rules and practices of the House, this resolution is privileged. The Chair thinks it is not and that it will have to go through the basket and be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PANAMA-CALIFORNIA EXPOSITION.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 38 and put it on its passage. I desire to state that this is an identical resolution to one which has been introduced in the House and been favorably reported by the House committee. It permits the Government exhibit to be removed from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco down to the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego.

The SPEAKER. When did this resolution come over?

Mr. CANTRILL. It was reported yesterday. That is my information. It is my recollection that it was reported by the Clerk of the Senate here yesterday.

The SPEAKER. What is the number of it?

Mr. CANTRILL. Senate joint resolution 38, which is identical with House resolution No. 3, which has been favorably reported by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of gentlemen from California if any of them got that resolution that came over here? There were two or three of the gentlemen up here looking at it. In the meantime, we will go ahead with something else until it is found.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 900. An act amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a decision of Judge Wolverton, of the United States District Court of Oregon, in reference to the Oregon and California land grants. His decision was rendered on December 9 last, and it is a decree his court enters on the decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States on this matter in June last.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the document named. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER, MO.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider the bill H. R. 4717—a bridge bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4717) to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

Be it enacted, etc., That Butler County, Mo., is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Black River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the south line of section 10, township 23 north, range 7 east, Butler County, in the State of Missouri, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Has this already been reported?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. It has been favorably reported.

Mr. MANN. This morning?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. By the committee.

Mr. MANN. It was reported this morning, was it?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Reported this morning.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object to that, although we all understand the circumstances. I believe there are several of these. Ordinarily we do not let them pass until they have been in print.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I am anxious to get this through before the holidays.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ARKANSAS RIVER, TULSA, OKLA.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3681, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and also favorably from the War Department. It relates to the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, by Tulsa County, at or near Tulsa, Okla.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3681) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at or near Tulsa, Okla.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Tulsa, in the State of Oklahoma, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Arkansas River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Tulsa, Okla., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. What is the urgent necessity for passing this bill at this time, without having it referred and——

Mr. DAVENPORT. It has been referred and reported favorably by the War Department and reported from the committee favorably this morning.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I did not mean without having it referred, but without having it printed.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can answer the gentleman's question. The county thought, as the railroad company and the toll-bridge company had been permitted to construct bridges there without any authorization, that they could go ahead and do the same thing.

When the county did that the War Department called attention to the fact that it had been declared a navigable stream up to where the county wished to construct a bridge. In the meantime they have several thousand dollars' worth of material on the ground, and they can not go ahead without getting this authority. For that reason it seems important to them to go ahead at this time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I shall not object. I wish to say, however, that it will not be long before objection will be made to the granting of unanimous consent for the construction of bridges across navigable streams unless the titles of the bills are printed in regular order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, so that the House and the country, and especially the people of the localities where it is proposed to erect these structures, may be thus duly notified that such legislation is pending.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk Senate joint resolution No. 56, and ask its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 56, and proceed to the present consideration thereof. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 56) extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States.

Resolved, etc., That the joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, appointed pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1915, is hereby given until the 1st day of February, 1916, in which to file the report required by the said act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for this? That is, why did not the commission meet and do business?

Mr. RAINEY. I will state, for the information of the gentleman from Illinois, that the printing of the testimony taken before the joint commission is not yet completed. We devoted to these hearings the greater portion of the months of October and November, and the hearings are very voluminous. We heard everybody who wanted to be heard, and the hearings will probably take up 2,000 printed pages. As yet they have not been even indexed.

Mr. MANN. When did the commission first meet here?

Mr. RAINEY. The commission met, I think, on the 20th of October.

Mr. MANN. How long did they sit then?

Mr. RAINEY. They sat almost continuously until the convening of this Congress; until two or three days before the session opened.

I will say that I do not think we shall meet until the 1st of February, but the printing of the hearings not having been completed yet, and the hearings not being indexed——

Mr. MANN. I came down here about the middle of November and saw in the papers every day statements that the commission was going to meet some time in the future; that it was not convenient to meet here now, and so on, and so on.

Mr. RAINEY. I am surprised that the gentleman saw those reports on the 15th of November, because we were in session on the 15th of November, and had been in session from the 20th of October, and we continued in session beyond the 15th of November.

Mr. MANN. Then you must have quit shortly before that time. I came here about the end of November, and saw no mention of any meeting at all.

Mr. RAINEY. We shall not meet again until the 1st of February.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. As I understood, the gentleman was to move to concur in this change of date with an amendment making it the 10th of January?

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit, I was going to offer the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, and if it is in order now, Mr. Speaker, I will do so if I can be recognized for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. It is in order now to get unanimous consent to consider it. Is there objection to the present consideration of it?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAGE of North Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by striking out "the 1st day of February" and inserting in lieu thereof "the 10th day of January."

Mr. RAINEY. I have no objection to that amendment, I will say. The only thing we want to do is to be able to come back here after the holidays and carefully consider the report before we present it, and the 10th day of January will be satisfactory.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, as a member of this commission, I am frank to say to the House that personally I regret that there has been any request for an extension of time. It seems to me, and has seemed to me, that this commission could do its work, and do its work well, and report by the time given to it by this House in which to report, which was the 1st of January.

This commission began its work under the call of the chairman on the 20th of October. It sat nearly every week day from the 20th of October until the 16th of November. Its sessions were from 10 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 5. A great amount of testimony was heard, and so far as I am concerned, as one of the members of the committee, I am entirely ready at this time, even if Congress adjourns to-day, to present a formulated report of what I believe to be right on the question submitted to us for determination by this House.

I realize that this question should be settled, and settled in a way that could be brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on the District of Columbia at a time when the House can take it up, and at a time when it can be studied and when the information obtained shall be available and valuable. I say, therefore, that I regret there has been a request for an extension of time on the part of this commission, for I think the commission ought to be able to present its report at the time mentioned in the authority given it by the House and by the Senate, but in view of the short time now asked beyond the time first assigned, I will interpose no objection to the request as amended.

The SPEAKER. Question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am a member of that joint select committee, have attended all of its meetings, and wish now to say a word in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The committee, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has just said, began its hearings of witnesses on the 20th of October and continued them until the 18th of November. Each day the session lasted from 10 o'clock in the morning until 1 in the afternoon, and from 2 to 5 in the afternoon.

There has been delay in printing the testimony. The last half of the printed pages of revised testimony—there are, in all, more than 1,750 pages—were not received by me nor by other members of the committee until last evening after the House adjourned, and then only in the form of loose sheets. The sheets were still wet from the printing press.

The matters which this committee was appointed to investigate and report upon have long been in dispute, one of them for more than 75 years. The questions involved are of exceeding importance to the people of the District of Columbia, and also, in many respects, to all of the people of the country. Like the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], I would be glad if the committee could have filed its report before this time. I felt sure that it could do so by the 1st of January. But because of the great delay in the printing and of the consequent necessary delay in preparing an index to the testimony, and in view of the fact that the committee must consult the revised printed pages in order that its recommendations may be based upon accurate statements of fact, I approve the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], as amended by the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], and sincerely hope that the resolution with the amendment will be adopted without objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PAGE], making the extension to the 10th of January.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. J. Res. 51. Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel;

S. 968. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

S. 1230. An act to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.

THE "EASTLAND" DISASTER.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, on the 14th instant the Speaker laid before the House the report and testimony taken by the Department of Commerce on the Eastland disaster at Chicago. As I understand it, the report embraces the testimony taken by the Steamboat-Inspection Service. It was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I think the testimony and report should have been referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as it relates to questions affecting our navigation laws, and we have bills now pending before the committee growing out of that disaster and intended to remedy the conditions in the future and make such disasters less liable to occur.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that change of reference will be made.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to say that so far as I have been advised that investigation refers not to the rates and practices of transportation, but to the structure and rules for navigating vessels. For that reason, perhaps, I ought not to object to this request. But while I am perfectly willing to yield to the jurisdiction of other committees the things to which I am not entitled, I am beginning to think I ought to complain at their taking and the giving to some of them of bills to which my committee is entitled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the committee of the gentleman from Georgia has too much business now and that he brings in more bills than anybody else in the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. We do not complain at all of the work we have to do.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change of reference will be made from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS ROCK RIVER, COLONA FERRY, ILL.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an inquiry about Senate resolution 38.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] called up a resolution a few moments ago. There are several gentlemen on this side who desire recognition.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair will recognize anybody who wants to be recognized. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING].

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 136) granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement of the bridge authorized by the act entitled "An act to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois," approved August 19, 1911, is hereby extended to one year from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the construction, maintenance, and operation of the bridge and approaches thereto therein authorized by the aforesaid act shall be in all respects in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Has this bill received consideration and been reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the War Department, too?

Mr. STERLING. It has.

Mr. ADAMSON. There are some amendments to be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Let the amendments be read first.

The Clerk read the amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Illinois," insert the words "by the counties of Henry and Rock Island, in the State of Illinois."

Page 1, line 8, after the word "act," add the words "and the time for completion of the bridge extended three years from the date of approval of this act."

Strike out all of section 2.

Renumber section 3 to be section 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the reason for the demand for the extension of the time?

Mr. STERLING. As I understand it, the people of these two counties have voted to construct this bridge. There was some delay in getting action by the people of the counties on the matter, and they have not been able to begin the construction of the bridge until this time. The matter was submitted to the people there, and that has caused some delay.

Mr. NORTON. It is a county bridge?

Mr. STERLING. Yes. The two counties join in the building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what was the date set in the original act for the commencement of the work?

Mr. MANN. One year after its passage.

Mr. STERLING. It was passed in August, 1911.

Mr. ADAMSON. The last extension was in 1913.

Mr. STERLING. The bill was passed in August, 1911.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the time set in that act for the beginning of the work of construction?

Mr. STERLING. One year.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That would have begun the work in 1912.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Was there any subsequent act extending the time?

Mr. STERLING. There was.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the date of that?

Mr. ADAMSON. Nineteen hundred and thirteen.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And that extended it to what time?

Mr. ADAMSON. It expired last year, or, rather, this year.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What was the reason given for not beginning the work within one year, as fixed by the original act?

Mr. STERLING. As I understand it, the authorities did not get a vote of the people soon enough to begin the construction of the bridge until this time.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The work of construction under the first act should have begun in 1912. Then, an amendatory act was passed in 1913 extending the time. Why did they not begin then?

Mr. STERLING. For the same reason, as far as I know. My colleague from Illinois may know the particulars about it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, the matter has been before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a number of times. There are two bodies politic trying to join themselves by this bridge. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] will realize that it is exceedingly difficult for two political bodies to move in harmony and get ready at the same time, or sometimes to get ready at all. They have had one hitch after another, until they have missed the time on both occasions, because they could not get their financiering ready. It is reported to the committee now that they have at last reached a point where they can work together and build the bridge, and they want this extension for that reason.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This extends the time how long?

Mr. ADAMSON. It gives them one year from now to begin the bridge, and three years from now to complete it.

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that the time for the building of this bridge has been extended twice, and the reason for the delay is that some of the supervisors were against it, because they thought their constituents did not want it, and they parleyed and delayed, and finally said, "We will put this thing up to the people and let them vote upon it." So they did put it to a vote, and the proposition to build the bridge carried by a very substantial majority at the last election. That is the reason why we are trying to get the bill passed now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Is it true that a bill of this character was passed through the Senate at the last session?

Mr. TAVENNER. Yes.

Mr. KING. What became of it in the House?

Mr. TAVENNER. The bill was introduced by Senator SHERMAN, of Illinois, but I never was asked to take any interest in the bill. The fact is, I did not know that there was such a bill until the day after Congress was adjourned the secretary of Senator SHERMAN called me up and asked me what I had done about it. Since I had not had the bill called to my attention, of course, I did not know that the bill was pending.

Mr. KING. It is true that the bridge is to extend from Rock Island County, in the gentleman's district, to Henry County, in the fifteenth district, and Henry County has delayed the matter on account of having submitted it to a vote of the people?

Mr. TAVENNER. Rock Island County submitted it to a vote of the people.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration?

There was no objection.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PANAMA-CALIFORNIA INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. CANTRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate joint resolution 38 be taken from the Speaker's table and put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution 38.

Resolved, etc., That all laws and parts of laws relating to foreign exhibits at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, including importations of the same, and of material necessary for buildings, or otherwise, for their proper exhibit are made applicable to the Panama-California International Exposition now in operation at San Diego, Cal., during the remainder of the year 1916, or during the continuance of the latter exposition during said period.

SEC. 2. That the Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, or such portion thereof as may be determined by the President is advisable, is transferred to the Panama-California International Exposition during its continuance at San Diego, Cal., and until not later than December 31, 1916. And any unexpended balance of the appropriation of $500,000 made in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1914 is reappropriated and made available for expenses attending the transfer and maintenance of said Government exhibit during said period ending not later than the close of the year 1916; and all laws or parts of laws relating to said Government exhibit and constituting a Government exhibit board and authorizing the detail of civilians and Army and Navy officers of the United States in connection with said Government exhibit at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition are continued and made applicable so far as the same may be applicable to the Panama-California International Exposition at San Diego, Cal., during its said continuance.

SEC. 3. That in the passage of this act the United States does not assume any liability of any kind whatever, and does not become responsible in any manner for any bond, debt, contract, expenditure, expense, or liability of the said Panama-California International Exposition, its officers, agents, servants, or employees, or incident to or growing out of the said exposition beyond the reappropriation of the unexpended balance of the appropriation heretofore made in connection with the said Government exhibit.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky what the unexpended balance of the $500,000 is?

Mr. CANTRILL. I understand that there is about $75,000 unexpended of the original appropriation, which of course would be used to transfer the exhibits back to the different points from whence they came. This bill simply permits the transfer of the exhibit to the San Diego exposition on its way back to the original places where the exhibits belong. It calls for no new appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. The original law requires that the exhibits shall be taken to California and returned without additional expense to the Government. Can the gentleman give us some information as to what it would require to return that exhibit to the National Government?

Mr. CANTRILL. I could not tell the gentleman, for I am not advised as to what it would cost to return it from San Francisco to the National Government, but it would cost very little more if it is returned by the way of San Diego Exposition. It is to be returned, and there is this balance of about $75,000. Section 3 of the bill specially provides that there shall be no additional expense assumed by the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. There is about $76,000 remaining, and it is proposed that this shall be used for transferring the exhibit by the way of San Diego to Washington, D. C., so as to give the exposition of the city of San Diego a chance to see the Government exhibit. I judge from that that all of the people of San Diego have not had an opportunity to go to San Francisco and see that great exposition, and that this will afford them an opportunity at San Diego.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman narrows the scope of the matter very considerably. There are many thousands of people who visit San Diego and the southern part of California every year, especially during the winter season. This appropriation will enable them to see this splendid Government exhibit at San Diego, where, as I say, many thousands of people may go next year who perhaps did not see it at San Francisco; under this resolution they will still be enabled to see something of the Government's activities.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just what I was referring to. I think the exposition at San Diego, from what I have read about it, is worthy of consideration. Of course, I realize that the enterprising people at San Diego found out that there was $75,000 of this appropriation left unused at San Francisco——

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman is unfair.

Mr. FOSTER. And, in order to see that it might be kept in California, these most enterprising people of the city of San Diego, for whom I have a wonderful admiration, as well as for the State, have asked that the exhibit be sent to the San Diego Exposition. They want to keep the exposition open another year, so that the people of California and visitors going there may have an opportunity of seeing the exhibit, showing what the Government is doing.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Illinois evidently does not understand, I take it, that a large amount of this sum will be expended to bring the exhibit back to the city of Washington. The amount that it will cost to transfer the exhibit to San Diego is comparatively small, and the balance of the money will have to be expended anyhow to bring the exhibit back to the city of Washington. So that the additional cost to the Government for this transfer is exceedingly small.

Mr. MANN. It will cost just about as much to bring it to San Diego from San Francisco as it would cost to bring it from San Francisco to the city of Washington.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. MANN. The main cost of transference is not the freight rate. I understand that the principal reason for this resolution is to have the Government give recognition to the exposition at San Diego, for the reason that without that recognition the people who have the foreign exhibits at San Francisco will not take their exhibits to San Diego. These foreign exhibitors at San Francisco are now breaking up their exhibits, and this is the prime object of the resolution. Unless this resolution passes speedily they will have been transferred elsewhere. It is now 4 minutes of 3 o'clock. This is a Senate resolution, and if it passes the House it goes back to the Senate. It has been put in an enrolled form so that there will be no delay. Unless it passes both bodies and gets the signature of the President immediately it will be valueless for the main purpose, because we are going to take a final adjournment for the holiday recess to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that in view of my high regard for the Representative from that district, Mr. KETTNER, and my great admiration for California and its people, and the fact that they have been able to run two expositions for one year and one exposition for two years, I think the Government should lend some assistance, and I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent, House resolution 3, of similar import, was laid on the table.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. SCOTT of Michigan to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of C. Horatio Scott, H. R. 18703, no adverse report having been made thereon.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. MCARTHUR to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Minnie Anderson, H. R. 19682, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916;

H. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915;

H. R. 663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa; and

H. R. 3638. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, for two days, to Mr. KONOP, on account of illness in family.

OBSERVANCE OF THE RULES.

The SPEAKER. Under special order of the House the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GARDNER, is entitled to an hour at this time in which to address the House, and the gentleman from Wyoming, Mr. MONDELL, to an hour at the conclusion of Mr. GARDNER'S address.

In view of the heat which developed in the discussion yesterday, the Chair wishes to state that there are two or three rules of the House to which no one seems to pay very much attention. One of them is that a Member sitting in his seat shall not inject any remarks into the speech of the gentleman who has the floor. Another is about the way of getting recognition to interrupt the Member who has the floor. The third rule which the Chair has in mind is that one Member shall not refer directly and personally to another. All of these rules were passed in the interest of decency and order, and the Chair hopes, no matter how heated the discussion may become, that they will be observed. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GARDNER, is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

PREPAREDNESS.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I recognize that what the Chair says is true. The Constitution itself says that no one shall be questioned elsewhere for what he says on the floor of this House, but that makes it doubly necessary for this House, in defense of its own dignity, to see to it that characters are not assailed without some opportunity for defense being offered.

LET US INVESTIGATE BOTH SIDES.

I have introduced a resolution for the investigation of certain organizations: The Navy League, to which I do not belong, although I have been instrumental in starting a branch of the Navy League in Massachusetts; the National Security League, to which I do not belong, although I was one of those who encouraged its organization in the first place; Labor's International Peace Council, to which I do not belong; and the American Defense Society, to which I do not belong. If the Committee on Rules feels that for international reasons it is not wise to investigate Labor's National Peace Council, well and good—cut that out of my resolution; but investigate all of these organizations which have been assailed, not alone in this House but by pacifists all over the country. Those assaults—and the clippings I have seen show very clearly what is being said in the country—mention my name and those of other reputable persons and charge that the origin of this campaign for preparedness rests with the makers of munitions of war and armor plate. Very well. If the Committee on Rules is prepared to protect the Members of the House and citizens who have no other protection from assault on the floor of the House, it will report my resolution; it will investigate me, and not only investigate me, but it will investigate the former Secretary of State and find out if he is making any money out of his propaganda, and it will investigate other gentlemen, on whichever side of the question they may be found. [Applause.]

LET US HAVE FACTS, NOT ARGUMENTS.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to say very little about the general principles governing the problems of our national defense. We all have sufficient knowledge of this question of preparedness from that point of view. What we want now is particular knowledge of the facts. We want to know what military force we have to-day as well as what is proposed. Before I get down to details, however, I desire to leave two thoughts for your reflection. In considering whether it is wise for the United States to enter into treaties providing for the arbitration of all questions, ask yourselves whether the labor unions of this country would consent to arbitrate the Asiatic-exclusion doctrine. Reflect on California's experience with Chinese cheap labor, and then ask any labor man of your acquaintance whether he would ever consent to arbitrate before a world court a demand for the repeal of the Chinese-exclusion law. Ask yourselves whether the American people would ever arbitrate the Monroe doctrine. Here is another thing I want you to think of: Mr. Bryan advocates treaties by which we bind ourselves not to go to war without a year's warning. Furthermore, he proposes that at the end of the year the people shall vote on the question of war or peace. Is that a safe system? Would the nature of the political campaign which would be conducted in that year be such as to enable us to go to war a united nation when the year had expired and the vote had been taken? Consider what the effect would have been if we had delayed a year before resorting to arms in the Revolution and in the Civil War.

A MANUAL FOR DEBATERS.

I prepared last January what I called a Manual for Debaters. Copies are at the disposal of anyone who asks for them. In that manual I gave original references to public documents or to the evidence on which my statements were based. Since then there have been developments, so that many of the facts which I shall allege this afternoon can not be substantiated from that manual. The very first statement which I shall make refers to an occurrence of a date more recent than the manual; but I propose to tell you where its substantiation can be found. In fact, I shall endeavor to follow that policy throughout the whole of this address, which will relate almost entirely to the Navy.

THE NORTH SEA BATTLE.

There has been only one naval battle in this war in which fleets of great modern fighting ships were engaged on both sides. That engagement took place in the North Sea on January 25, 1915. Taking the British fleet and the German fleet together, there were nine great fighting ships in the line of battle, not to mention the smaller fry—the destroyers, light cruisers, submarines, and so on. Of these nine fighting ships in line of battle, eight were capital ships, and the ninth, the Bluecher, was a capital ship when she was completed in 1909. The term "capital" ship is applied to a ship capable of taking its place in the first line of battle. In present-day usage the term is only applied to battle cruisers and dreadnaughts; although, as a matter of fact, in the North Sea engagement Germany actually used the powerful armored cruiser Bluecher in the first line of battle.

There were nine big ships engaged, five on the British side and four on the German side. The British ships were the Lion, the Tiger, the Indomitable, the New Zealand, and the Princess Royal. The German ships were the Seydlitz, the Derflinger, the Moltke, and the Bluecher. One of those vessels, the German armored cruiser Bluecher, was sent to the bottom of the sea. Why was she sent to the bottom of the sea? Because the Bluecher was slower by 4 nautical miles per hour than any other of those nine ships. So when the German fleet turned toward Helgoland the Bluecher lagged behind and became a target for the British fleet, and she was sent to the bottom of the sea. The Bluecher, which was sent to the bottom of the sea largely because she was 4 nautical miles slower than any other vessel in that battle, was faster than the fastest capital ship or armored cruiser in the American Navy, built or building. You will find coroboration of that statement on pages 853 and 854 of the United States Navy Yearbook for 1914. (S. Doc. No. 637, 63d Cong., 3d sess.)

THE GENERAL BOARD OF THE NAVY.

At home a great many people have said to me, "GARDNER, why is it you people down in Congress do not have a board or commission or something—we do not care what you call it—to decide what sort of a navy we need to make us safe, and then you can go ahead and provide it?" Now, that is a sensible question, and the answer is that we have had precisely such a board ever since 1903. Year after year we have kicked the board's recommendations into the waste-paper basket. That board is called the General Board of the Navy. It was instituted in 1903, the same year in which we voted for five battleships. In 1903 Secretary Moody and President Roosevelt decided that they ought to have a report as to what we needed to make us safe, and so they constituted this General Board of the Navy. Along in October, 1903, the General Board made its report. Since that time, year after year, the board has sent in an annual report, recommending a building program for each year. In 1903, after examining into the building programs of other nations, and after taking into account our geographical situation and all the other elements of the problem, the board reported on what we needed to make us safe. Safe against what? Safe against any nation except Great Britain. Now, why except Great Britain? Because the board assumed the friendliness of Great Britain. It used Germany as a standard by which to measure our necessities. Germany was not actually mentioned by name as our strongest probable enemy; but in the memorandum attached to the report that country was indicated both by its geographical situation and by a citation of its naval legislation.

This 1903 report called for a navy centering around a fleet of 48 battleships. Later on the program was amended so as to call for 48 battleships less than 20 years old. Nothing in the original report was said about the age of superannuation. The board has changed from time to time its recommendations as to the number of destroyers, but never, unless this year, in its most recent report, has the board changed its estimate as to the number of battleships required. As I shall indicate later, the board's recent report was submitted under instructions which forced it to offer a restricted program. I shall take that matter up when I compare the new program of the Secretary of the Navy and the new program of the General Board with that old program for 48 battleships.

HOW DOES OUR NAVY RANK?

In considering a building program we must take into account what other nations have done and are doing. Let us see what story our Navy Department tells us. I hold in my hand a bulletin of the Office of Naval Intelligence of the United States Navy Department. It is entitled "Warship Tonnage of the Principal Naval Powers." It is reproduced on a smaller scale to face page 850, United States Navy Yearbook, 1914. It is dated July 1, 1914, just before the war broke out, and is the last bulletin of the kind which has been published by our Navy Department. In this bulletin is given the relative warship tonnage of all the principal nations of the world. Ships over 20 years old are not included; neither are ships authorized but not begun. The table comprises warship tonnage both built and building.

I read from the first column, headed, "Present order. Tonnage completed." The date is July 1, 1914, remember:

Great Britain, 2,157,850 tons; Germany, 951,713; United States, 765,133 tons. Now, mind you, those are the figures for tonnage complete a year ago last July. Let us see how the score would have stood if we add to the tonnage complete the tonnage then building. Here I read from the second column in this table. It shows the tonnage complete, plus tonnage building: Great Britain, 2,714,106 tons; Germany, 1,306,577 tons; France, third, 899,915 tons; United States, fourth, 894,889 tons.

Now let us see how we stand in the list of modern fighting ships, the capital ships—as I said, vessels authorized but not begun are not included. This bulletin which I am exhibiting shows, of course, that Great Britain leads in battleships of the dreadnaught type. By the way, my friends, any battleship anterior to the dreadnaught type is about as much up to date as a one-cylinder automobile. This table of our Office of Naval Intelligence, dated July 1, 1914, gives us the following figures of the world's dreadnaughts: Great Britain, 36 built and building; Germany, 20 built and building; the United States, 12 built and building. Since that day we have started three more dreadnaughts building and last March we authorized two additional, but no work will be done on either of them for months to come. Next let us look at the international figures in the matter of battle cruisers. You know what battle cruisers are. A battle cruiser, except that it is lightly armored, is nothing more nor less than a dreadnaught which is speeded through the water at the rate of a railroad train. For instance, take the battle cruiser Queen Mary. She is a ship of 27,000 tons, the same size as the New York and the Texas, our latest dreadnaughts in commission. We are building bigger ones now. The speed of the dreadnaughts New York and Texas is 21 nautical miles per hour.

The dreadnaught Nevada on her trial trip the other day beat that record by a fraction of a mile.

What do you suppose is the speed of the British battle cruiser Queen Mary? According to the latest United States Navy Yearbook, 1914, page 852, her speed is no less than 35.7 nautical miles per hour, 12 nautical miles an hour faster than the Nevada. Jane's "Fighting Ships" assigns a speed of 33 nautical miles an hour to the Queen Mary.

Let us see how we stand in the matter of battle cruisers according to this same official bulletin which I hold in my hand. On July 1, 1914, I find the following figures: Great Britain, battle cruisers, built and building, 10; Germany, battle cruisers, built and building, 8; United States, battle cruisers, built and building, 0.

Now, why have we no battle cruisers? More than once Capt. Hobson, of Alabama, has offered amendments providing them. In 1912 both the General Board of the Navy and Secretary Meyer recommended their construction. One of the principal reasons why we have no battle cruisers is because they cost a good deal more than battleships, and we do not want to pay the bill.

If you want to understand the situation in this House, turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for February 5, 1915, and read the words of the Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, at that time chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. UNDERWOOD proposed that we should only authorize one single solitary battleship in 1915 on account of the expense. He said that in his opinion we should never be obliged to go to war to maintain American principles. That sounds well, of course, and it is a certainty that you can save money that way—for a while, at least.

STOP HUMBUGGING.

Mr. Speaker, if we are going to build a Navy, let us build a real Navy. Let us quit this make-believe pretense that all our geese are swans. Let us face the music and see what an adequate Navy is going to cost us. Do not go ahead with the idea that by stopping a little picayune logrolling here and there and by dismantling a useless navy yard or so and by abandoning some political Army posts that we shall thereby save enough money to cut some figure in the aggregate bill that we have got to face. We have got to face a perfectly stupendous bill if we want to make this country safe. The question is, Do we or do we not want to face that bill?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERLEY). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. What does the gentleman consider a safe navy as compared with other navies?

Mr. GARDNER. I have repeatedly said that an adequate navy for the United States is a navy large enough to take the sea and keep the sea against any navy which any nation can bring to attack us. For instance, our Navy must be large enough to hold the sea against such part of the British battle fleet as Great Britain could mass for an attack on us at any particular time.

DREADNAUGHT VERSUS SUBMARINE.

Many people think that the days of the dreadnaught are at an end and that the days of the submarine have come. If that were true, Germany would have had control of the sea last summer, when her submarines were so active. If that were true, it would not be German ships that we should see interned in New York Harbor. It would be British ships. If the submarine were mistress of the sea, Great Britain would not be able safely to move one and three-quarter millions of men from Australia and Canada and Africa and the British Isles to the battle fields of the Continent. If the dreadnaught had lost its supremacy, letters addressed to England would not be delivered except by the grace of Germany. Yet each one of you knows that the letter which you mail in Washington to-day will be delivered in London with very slight delay.

WHERE ARE OUR SUBMARINES?

But let us, for the sake of argument, admit that the day of the dreadnaught has gone by and that the day of the submarine has come. My friends, where are our submarines? On the Atlantic coast we have just 18 submarines, of which 5—the "C" boats—are kept down at the Panama Canal. The remaining 13 submarines includes, among others, the G–3, authorized in 1909. For some reason which I do not understand the Navy Department carries the G–3 as in full commission, while the Bureau of Construction and Repair calls it 93 per cent completed. I have been told that it can not submerge and that it remains tied up to the surface of the water in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. At all events, G–3 was not in the Hudson River parade last summer nor did it take part in the subsequent maneuvers.

We have, therefore, only 12 submarines with which to guard 3,000 miles of coast from the St. Croix River to the Rio Grande. I do not know the condition of those submarines just now. I know their condition when they were tried out in maneuvers last May, for Secretary Daniels publicly admitted the breakdown of five or six of them. (Daily papers, May 28, 1915.) I know about their condition in November, 1914, when Admiral Fletcher ordered the submarine flotilla to mobilize, for I heard the evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives.

The New York Tribune about a year ago published a series of Navy articles. In one of these articles the assertion was made that at the November mobilization only one submarine was in condition to dive. The Committee on Naval Affairs started to investigate the facts. On December 15, 1914, Commander Yates Stirling, jr., testified. At that time he was in command of the submarine flotilla. Representative ROBERTS, of Massachusetts, a member of the Naval Committee, called attention to the newspaper article, and then he said to Stirling:

I am asking you that question because some newspapers state that there is only 1 submarine out of the 17 that will dive.

Commander STIRLING. I think I can explain where they got that impression. The Commander in Chief ordered the mobilization of the Atlantic submarine flotilla at Hampton Roads on the 1st of November of all available vessels. He left it to me to say what vessels I would bring down there. He did not consider the 5 at Colon. That reduced the number in the flotilla to 12.

Commander Stirling goes on to tell why this boat and that boat were not available, and then he winds up by saying:

So when we got down there the admiral wanted to know what we could do. I told him we had then only 1 submarine that I thought could efficiently take part in the maneuvers at sea off the coast. (Naval bill hearings, Dec. 15, 1914, pp. 866, 867.)

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman mean to say that this country can not produce submarines that are efficient at all, and that over-sea countries are the only ones that can build them in such a way as that they can go to sea?

Mr. GARDNER. What I have told you is our exact experience.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. ELSTON. Can the gentleman give any reason or explanation from his experience for this condition?

Mr. GARDNER. It is a long story. If the gentleman will read the evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs last year he will get a fair idea of the situation. The trouble is a good deal a question of batteries. Perhaps the shortage of officers and crews may be partly to blame.

WHERE ARE OUR AIR CRAFT?

A great many people think that the days of the submarine have gone by, and that air craft are now able to detect submarines and point them out for destruction. That may or may not be the case; but, for the sake of argument, let us admit that air craft can master the submarine danger.

Mr. Speaker, where are our air craft? I am going to cite the evidence of Capt. Mark Bristol, in charge of the air fleet of the Navy. (Naval bill hearings, Dec. 3, 1914, p. 299.) Capt. Bristol told of the air fleets of various countries at the breaking out of the war. He stated that at that time, according to his information, France had 22 dirigibles and 1,400 aeroplanes, Russia 18 dirigibles and 800 aeroplanes, Germany 40 dirigibles and 1,000 aeroplanes, and so forth, and the United States 23 aeroplanes. Of those 23 aeroplanes, 10 belonged to the Army and 11 belonged to the Navy. I noticed that when the senior naval advisor of the Secretary of the Navy spoke at the Naval Academy alumni dinner at Annapolis he told his hearers that at that time the Navy had only three good aeroplanes. (Morning papers, June 4, 1915.) Secretary Daniels's report of December 1, 1915, informs us that the Navy now possesses 15 such craft.

Few as are our aeroplanes we have no airships at all unless the situation has changed very recently. It is true that the Secretary of the Navy has ordered one dirigible at a very moderate expense, but the newspapers say that the contract speed is only 25 to 35 miles. So leisurely a craft would not cut much figure against the swift airships of the European war.

HOW MANY DREADNAUGHTS?

We constantly hear incorrect accounts as to the actual strength of our Navy at the present time. Desire to confuse the issue is sometimes the source of the difficulty, but more often loose statement is responsible. For instance, just as soon as a new dreadnaught is authorized by Congress it is added to the list of dreadnaughts just exactly as if it were ready to fight. The two battleships which we authorized last March will not be begun for months to come and will not be finished for nearly four years; yet in debate in this House and in published lists they are reckoned as if they were actually in full commission. Four submarines which we voted to build on June 30, 1914, had not been begun one year later on June 30, 1915. (See Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory, Aug. 1, 1915, p. 104.) Nevertheless they are spoken of in debate as if they constituted an actual part of our Navy.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. KELLEY. I noticed in the newspapers some time ago—I do not know whether it was true or not—that the Bethlehem Steel Co. had finished quite a large number of submarines for a foreign navy within a period of four months. Does the gentleman know whether that is true or not?

Mr. GARDNER. I know it to be a fact that the Fore River Shipbuilding Co. in a very short space of time finished the parts of a large number of submarines, which were speedily put together and sent abroad within a very few months after the order was received; but it is fair to say that they were small craft for the most part.

Mr. KELLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, if I remember correctly, last year there were some 19 submarines previously authorized which had not yet been delivered, and since that time we have added 25. Out of that 44, does the gentleman know how many have been delivered?

Mr. GARDNER. I will tell the gentleman exactly. At the present time we have 37 submarines completely built. That includes every submarine we ever built except the old A–1, which was scrapped, and the F–4, which was sunk off Hawaii. I am reading now from the Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory for December 1, 1915, pages 106 and 108. In addition, we have at this moment 19 more which are building. They were authorized in 1912, 1913, and 1914. (See U. S. Navy Yearbook, 1914, p. 735.) Furthermore, we have another 19 which have been authorized but are not even begun. One of them was authorized on June 30, 1914, and the others on March 3, 1915.

Mr. NORTON. Can the gentleman tell us why they have not been begun?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I can not tell you. I think one of the minor difficulties is that Congress has not given to the Navy Department a sufficient number of draftsmen. I think there has been a good deal of disputing as to the type of batteries to be used. About four years ago some young officers of the Navy—I rather think Lieut. Miles was one—went to Thomas A. Edison and asked him if he could develop a battery for submarines. I am told that Mr. Edison has been four years experimenting. I hope Congress will get a fair, unsterilized report on the Edison batteries. I hear very divergent stories as to their success.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman's argument seems to impress me as carrying the inference that our military officers are altogether incompetent, or inferior to the officers of Germany or England.

Mr. GARDNER. I am not going into that.

Mr. NORTON. Is that the purpose of the gentleman's argument?

Mr. GARDNER. No; that is not the purpose.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GARDNER. All right.

Mr. SNYDER. I should like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether the submarines or parts of submarines that have been furnished by the Schwab or Bethlehem steel companies have been operating successfully?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know anything about the Schwab or Bethlehem companies. I know about the Fore River Ship Building Co., and that is the only one I know about. I am told that Schwab has bought up the plant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to continue——

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You seem to object——

Mr. GARDNER. Is this a question for information, or do you want to discuss some general principle?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Oh, no; I just want to ask you a question.

Mr. GARDNER. All right, go ahead.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You object to our contention that submarines that have been ordered should be counted when we go to considering a new program?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I do not object to that. I object to your sending out information to the people that is not correct.

SLOW CONSTRUCTION OF BATTLESHIPS.

I hold in my hand the Navy and Marine Corps List and Directory for December 1, 1915. On pages 106 and 107 you will find the name of every first-line battleship we possess. I am not talking about ships that are building or ships whose construction we have authorized. I am talking about what we actually possess to-day. How many do you suppose there are? There are just eight, of which one is in reserve—the North Dakota—because four times already in its short career it has had to have its turbines repaired.

The Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, New York, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming are the only first-line battleships which we have in full commission to-day. They are all dreadnaughts. To be sure, the Oklahoma and Nevada also are practically ready, but when do you think that their construction was authorized? It was authorized on the 4th day of March, 1911, four years and nine months ago. (U. S. Navy Yearbook, 1914, p. 834.)

It is true that in each case there has been a substantial delay owing to exceptional causes. So we have, as a matter of fact, 8 first-line battleships finished, 2 practically ready, 5 in process of building, and 2 authorized but not begun. Yet you will repeatedly hear on the floor of this House the glib statement that we possess 17 dreadnaughts.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This is the type of vessel that the gentleman says is the necessary fighting unit of the Navy?

Mr. GARDNER. I am simply giving my opinion.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And that is supplemented by the swift type of battle cruiser?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; that is my idea.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Has the gentleman any information how long it takes a foreign nation to build a superdreadnaught?

Mr. GARDNER. In England it takes about two years, or a little more, from the date of the laying of the keel. That is to say, in peace time. I think that recently it has been taking us 8 or 10 months longer than that; but, in addition, we delay prodigiously before the keel is laid.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Did I understand the gentleman to state a while ago that the fastest ship we had in the first-class line was slower than the slowest ship that Germany had in the first-class line?

Mr. GARDNER. No; I did not say so. I said that the fastest battleship or first-line ship of any sort which we own, built or building, is slower than the slowest ship of the nine which were engaged in the battle line of the North Sea fight.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. One more question.

Mr. GARDNER. No; I decline to yield further.

FIVE YEARS AWAY FROM PREPAREDNESS.

The most significant evidence that was given last year before the Committee on Naval Affairs was given by Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, at that time senior naval adviser of the Secretary of the Navy. In response to a question, Admiral Fiske said that it would take us about five years to get our Navy into shape to fight successfully and effectively against an effective enemy. (Naval bill hearings, Dec. 17, 1914, p. 1023.)

I have not seen a single denial of that statement, nor have I heard its soundness questioned.

CAN AN ENEMY LAND?

Last year Admiral Fletcher, commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet, testified that a foreign foe, after disposing of our Navy, could land almost anywhere on our coast. (Naval bill hearings, Dec. 9, 1914, p. 536.) Of course, there was a storm of denial of Admiral Fletcher's testimony. Recently I took the matter up with Admiral Dewey, chairman of the General Board of the Navy. Here is the admiral's letter, in which he describes our exposure to the landing of a hostile force:

OFFICE OF THE ADMIRAL OF THE NAVY,
Washington, December 10, 1915.

Hon. A. P. GARDNER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GARDNER: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 9, asking me to write you setting forth my views on the question of the possibility of large hostile forces landing on our coast, and inviting my attention to an article by Eric Fisher Wood, which appeared in the Century last month.

The part of the Atlantic coast mentioned in Mr. Wood's article extends from Eastport, Me., to Cape Henry, Va., and in this area we have permanent defenses on the Penobscot and Kennebec Rivers, at Portland, Portsmouth, Boston, and New Bedford Harbors, at Narragansett Bay, at the eastern entrance to Long Island Sound, at the entrance to New York Harbor, on the Delaware River, at Baltimore, on the upper Potomac River, and at Hampton Roads. Of these defenses only those at Portland, Narragansett Bay, entrance to Long Island Sound, and the entrance to New York protect the coast; the others are solely harbor defenses.

It is true that a large hostile force can land on the open coast wherever the transports can get within reasonable distance of the shore, and especially so where their landing is covered by the gunfire of the naval escort, even though the landing be opposed by troops. The most recent example of this is the landing of the allied troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula. We have similar examples in our own history, as the landing of Scott's army near Vera Cruz, the landings near Fort Fisher, and the landing of Shafter's army on the south coast of Cuba.

From Eastport, Me., to Cape Henry, Va., there are but very few places where large ships can not approach with safety to within 2 miles of the coast, and the extent of this shore line that is too precipitous or too ragged to make a landing impracticable is small. The only force that can prevent such a landing is a navy of our own strong enough to prevent such an expedition from reaching our coast.

In saying that a hostile expedition can land upon our coast at will, outside the range of our coast-defense guns, I mean that it is physically possible and with no very great difficulty. I do not mean that such a force could accomplish its object by landing anywhere on our coast. No commander would desire to have his force isolated on the peninsulas of Maine nor on the sand dunes of New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, or Virginia, with inland waters between them and the mainland. They will prefer to land where there are railroads and good roads leading to their objective, which would probably be one of our large cities. Such places are numerous along the coast of Massachusetts, both shores of Massachusetts Bay, the eastern end and south shore of Long Island, and in the Delaware and Chesapeake Bays.

A landing place sheltered from the force of the sea would greatly facilitate the disembarkation of a hostile force, but is not a vital necessity. Such sheltered places are too numerous to name, but among them are Frenchmans Bay, Penobscot Bay, Blue Hill Bay, Sheepscott River, Casco Bay in Maine, Rockport, Gloucester, Salem, Plymouth, Provincetown, Vineyard Sound, and Buzzards Bay in Massachusetts, Fort Pond Bay, and then to the southward Delaware and Chesapeake Bays. Only the Navy can prevent landings at those places, and that Navy must be strong enough to defeat the enemy; and should we have such a navy the enemy would not attempt an invasion as long as it remained in existence.

Our main defense and protection from invasion must therefore always rest with the Navy, which must ever remain our first and best line of defense. This defense, unless adequate, is impotent; and, as before stated, adequacy is not reached until the Navy is strong enough to meet on equal terms the navy of the strongest probable adversary.

Sincerely, yours,

GEORGE DEWEY.

SECRETARY DANIELS'S BUILDING PLAN.

Now, let us take up the President's message and Secretary Daniels's building program. The program of the General Board of the Navy we can not take up, because it will not be released until next Wednesday. It has just been sent to us all in confidence. I shall not comment on it except as to certain matters of which I was cognizant prior to the reception of this confidential report. To those particular matters I shall not hesitate to allude.

In the first place, as I publicly stated on November 18, the General Board of the Navy has made two reports. Only the second report will be published next Wednesday, and the second report was made under instructions limiting the board's freedom of action. The first report was untrammeled. It was made in compliance with the President's query as to what naval strength we need for our protection.

What the Secretary has done with that first report no one knows. Instead of communicating it to Congress, he has sent us the board's hampered report. This hampered report was prepared in compliance with the Secretary's order to cut the new construction cost down to about one hundred millions a year. In other words, instead of letting the General Board tell us what it thinks we need and leaving it to us to judge of the amount of expenditure which we are willing to devote to the Navy, Secretary Daniels instructed the board as to just how much expenditure they should be permitted to recommend. If you want to know what the General Board really thinks, order out the withheld report of July 30, 1915.

AN EIGHT-YEAR PROGRAM.

As I said a little while ago, the previous program of the General Board called for a Navy large enough to meet the German Navy building program. This previous program called for a fleet centering around 48 battleships less than 20 years old. This new program of the General Board, prepared under the financial restrictions imposed by Secretary Daniels, calls for only 46 battleships and battle cruisers less than 20 years old when the building is completed in 1924. I think 1924 is a fair date to fix for the actual completion of Secretary Daniels's program. That allows eight years from the time we accept the Secretary's program, provided that we accept it during the present session of Congress. We are proposing to vote the money in five successive years. Three out of the sixteen new capital ships are not to be authorized until the last year. As it takes four years after the date of authorization to build a dreadnaught, and probably about the same length of time to build a battle cruiser, 1924 is a reasonable date to set for the completion of the program.

ARCHÆOLOGY.

Now suppose we verify my statement as to our battleship fleet. It differs radically from that of President Wilson and Secretary Daniels. To be sure, in arriving at their conclusions, they have taken the year 1921 to figure on instead of the year 1924, just as if dreadnaughts and cruisers were complete the minute that their construction was authorized by Congress.

For the sake of argument, let us assume that it is fair to take the year 1921 for our comparison. According to the President, we shall have in 1921 the following "effective" battleships built and building, to wit, 27 battleships of the first line, 25 battleships of the second line, not to mention 6 battle cruisers, making 58 capital ships in all, built and building. Secretary Daniels arrives at the same figures, but he does not say that those second-line battleships will be "effective." All he says is that he accepts "the General Board estimate of survival for present vessels."

Of course everyone agrees that under Daniels's plan, in 1921 we shall have 27 first-line battleships and 6 battle cruisers, if we count every ship authorized whether the keel has been laid or not. But how about the second liners?

The President says that in 1921 we shall have 25 effective battleships in the second line. The President must be a real lover of antiques, for neither he nor anyone else can count those 25 battleships without including in the list the dear old Spanish War veterans, the Massachusetts, the Oregon, and the Iowa. They were authorized in 1890, and they are not even carried in the list of battleships in our own Navy Yearbook. (U. S. Navy Yearbook, 1914, p. 854.) Nevertheless, they can be resuscitated and counted by a passionate archæologist, like President Wilson. In the Navy Yearbook we shall find only 22 battleships, but by the end of 1921 six of them will be over 20 years old, and at the end of 1924 only 13 of them will be less than 20 years old. Hence my statement that the new program set forth by Secretary Daniels calls for only 46 battleships and battle cruisers less than 20 years old when the building program is actually completed in 1924.

Twenty-seven dreadnaughts, 6 battle cruisers, and 13 predreadnaughts less than 20 years old in the second line. In all, 46 battleships and cruisers when the program is complete. You can not add a single battleship to that total to save your life, unless you disregard the 20-year superannuation rule laid down by the General Board of the Navy.

Yet Secretary Daniels claims that there will be 25 battleships of the second line in 1921. Furthermore he declares that he accepts "the General Board estimates of survival for present vessels." I simply can not understand that declaration. In November, 1914, the General Board wrote to Secretary Daniels that already, prior to May, 1910, "experience had shown that the three older battleships, the Indiana, Massachusetts, and Oregon, then 20 years old from date of authorization, were approaching the limit of their effective life." (Report of General Board of Navy, Nov. 17, 1914, sec. 10.) If those ships were approaching superannuation in 1910, what will be their condition in 1921? Here is another sentence from the General Board's report for 1914: "Further studies from our own experience and from that of other navies and from practice abroad convinces the General Board that the effective life of battleships is about 20 years from time of completion." I can not reconcile that report with Secretary Daniels's statement that in preparing his table of battleships he accepted "the General Board estimate of survival for present vessels."

As a matter of fact, if Secretary Daniels's program is accepted the building will be completed in 1924. Instead of 25 battleships in the second line at the end of 1924 we shall have but 13 battleships not superannuated. Of these 13 ships only 3 will be less than 17 years old, to wit, the New Hampshire, the Michigan, and the South Carolina. (U. S. Navy Yearbook, 1914, p. 854.)

NOTE.—December 25, 1915. The General Board's report of October 12, 1915, was released for publication three days ago. The very same 25 battleships which Secretary Daniels classes as second-line battleships in 1921 are classified as follows by the General Board: Predreadnaughts, second line, 13; superannuated predreadnaughts, third line, 9; harbor-defense battleships, 3. Total, 25.

The year selected by this General Board happens to be 1922 instead of 1921, but that does not affect the classification. (Report of Secretary of Navy, 1915, pp. 83 and 85.)

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts state what he thinks this Congress ought to do on the subject of making battleships?

Mr. GARDNER. I think that our true policy is to build our Navy into second place, and a strong second place at that, just as quickly as the capacity of our shipyards and the training of officers and men will permit. Ultimately I think that our Navy must be strong enough to meet on even terms such part of the British fleet as can be brought against us at any one time. Even if we are in danger of being swindled in the matter of prices, I believe in going ahead just as fast as we can.

If, as events unfold themselves, there appears to be a real assurance of disarmament after the war, there will be plenty of time to call a halt. By the way, talking of naval disarmament, did it ever occur to you that Great Britain is even further ahead of the rest of the world in her merchant marine than she is in her navy? Suppose that every navy is abolished. In that case Great Britain will, in comparison to other nations, be stronger at sea than ever, for she can easily put guns aboard half her merchant fleet and still do her carrying trade with the remainder.

I am inclined to think that we ought to vote seven or eight new dreadnaughts and battle cruisers this year. As near as I can find out the building capacity of our shipyards, public and private, is adequate for the simultaneous construction of at least 13 of these big capital ships. Of course it would be necessary to build more battleship ways in the yards, but I am told the ways can be constructed in nine months or so. At all events they can be constructed in plenty of time to be ready when the constructors are prepared to lay the keels. It must not be forgotten that three of the battleships already voted by Congress will in all probability not have been launched on January 1, 1917, so that we can not count on the entire capacity of our yards.

THE SNAIL'S PACE.

No matter whether our Navy-building program is big or little, common sense tells us to go ahead on it as fast as possible. That at least is the view of the General Board of the Navy. Secretary Daniels's plan is based on precisely the opposite view.

The Secretary recommends that the appropriation to pay for his new building program shall be divided into five parts, and that in each of the next five years Congress shall vote one of these parts. He then proceeds to recommend that the smallest of these appropriations shall be the one which we are to vote at this session of Congress.

The administration speaks of Secretary Daniels's program as a five-year program. It is nothing of the sort. It takes, to be sure, only five years to vote the program; but four more years must elapse before the actual shipbuilding is complete. From the date when the construction of a battleship is voted to the date when it is commissioned it is safe to assume that four years will elapse. If we adopt the Secretary's plan, the entire new fleet will not be commissioned, at the earliest, before the summer of 1924.

NAVY BOOKKEEPING.

The Secretary says that his grand total for new construction is $502,000,000; but an analysis of his figures, on page 7 of his report, shows that in this amount he has included about $48,000,000 to pay for construction already authorized by Congress. In his recommendation for this year the Secretary has included $28,000,000 to pay for vessels already provided by Congress or under construction. For actual new construction, then, instead of $95,000,000 this year, he has recommended only $67,000,000, and that amount, by the way, includes the provision for reserve ammunition and the aviation service of the Navy. It seems to me that if we are going to have a new construction program we ought not to charge in $28,000,000 worth of old construction.

CREWS.

Mr. Speaker, I think that 20,000 men added to the Navy would probably at the present moment be more valuable than three times that number added to the Army. But Secretary Daniels does not suggest the addition of anywhere near 20,000 men. Yet Admiral Badger and Assistant Secretary Franklin D. Roosevelt testified last year before the Naval Affairs Committee that we were eighteen to twenty thousand men short. (Naval bill hearings, December, 1914, pp. 482, 951.) The Secretary now comes before us and he says that next year he will need 7,500 more men and 2,500 more apprentices. That is the additional number of men which he requests for the Navy proper, and for the Marine Corps he asks an increase of 1,500 men. When there is so much difference of view between Secretary Daniels and the Navy experts, it is almost imperative that Congress should find out what the average officer of the Navy thinks about the matter. We want to hear from men outside the department's sphere of influence.

You will find out about the shortages of men in Admiral Fletcher's fleet if you call for his report of August 15, 1915, and insist upon having it.

ARMY PLANS.

I have very little time to-day to discuss the proposed increase in the Army. There are several different plans, and there are more coming, I am told. There is the plan known as the "Garrison plan"; there is the plan known as the "Glenn plan," supposed to have been drawn up by Col. Glenn, of the Army. Then there is Senator CHAMBERLAIN'S plan and the plan favored by Congressman HAY, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. There is the War College plan, which was sent to your offices the other day. I am not going into the difference between those plans. The War College plan calls for a Regular Army of 281,000 officers and men, all told. (Statement of Army War College, September, 1915, p. 21.) The Garrison plan calls for 141,843 officers and men, all told. (Report of Secretary of War, 1915, p. 24.) Both plans calls for a continental army—400,000 men in the Garrison plan and 500,000 men in the War College plan.

I am not prepared to give you my opinion of these various plans to-day. I am seriously anxious to see something done in the way of practical legislation, even if it does not entirely meet my own views. If I can not get a full loaf I shall be forced to take half a loaf. That is all there is to it.

PAYING THE BILL.

Mr. Speaker, I am a member of the Ways and Means Committee. I think it quite in the cards that a plan may be afoot to prevent the report out of that committee of a bill to finance the proposed increases of our Army and Navy. Some people believe that the Republicans on the Ways and Means Committee will say, "We shall not vote to report a bill raising revenue for your increased military and naval expenses unless that bill provides that the revenue shall be raised by a higher protective tariff." With the Democrats on that committee who are against a greater Army and Navy added to the Republicans who are insistent on tariff legislation, the wiseacres think they can see a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means against any new revenue bill at all. I can not speak for any other Republican member of the committee, but if the pacifists are counting on me to countenance such a plan they are quite mistaken. I may not like the kind of bill which you Democrats will frame in the Ways and Means Committee. If so, I shall try to improve it, which, of course, I shall not be able to do. If, however, that bill is designed for the purpose of paying for an increased Army and Navy, and if the alternative is no revenue bill at all and therefore no increases, I shall vote to report your bill out of committee.

DOCUMENTS WHICH CONGRESS SHOULD INSIST ON HAVING.

I am going to ask this House by resolution, if necessary, to call for the report of the General Board of the Navy, made in reply to the President's directions that an adequate naval program should be formulated. That report is dated July 30, 1915. You must get that July 30, 1915, report if you wish the real opinion of the General Board of the Navy.

Admiral Fletcher is commander in chief of the Atlantic Fleet. You must require Admiral Fletcher's report of August 15, 1915, if you wish to know the true state of our Navy at the present moment. Furthermore, you must insist on having his confidential order of February 13, 1913, if you desire to get track of the target-practice question. You must call for the letter of the General Board of the Navy to the Secretary of the Navy, written August 3, 1914, if you wish to get the opinion of the General Board of the Navy as to the necessity of our immediate preparation lest we be involved in this European war.

[NOTE.—December 25, 1915. The July 30, 1915, report of the General Board of the Navy was made public to-day.]

CONCLUSION.

Here are some lines written by one of the gentlest writers of American verse, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the benevolent "Poet at the Breakfast Table":

NONRESISTANCE.

Perhaps too far in these considerate days
Has patience carried her submissive ways:
Wisdom has taught us to be calm and meek,
To take one blow and turn the other cheek;
It is not written what a man shall do
If the rude caitiff smite the other, too!
Land of our fathers, in thine hour of need
God help thee, guarded by the passive creed!
As the lone pilgrim trusts to beads and cowl,
When through the forest rings the gray wolf's howl;
As the deep galleon trusts her gilded prow
When the black corsair slants athwart her bow;
As the poor pheasant, with his peaceful mien,
Trusts to his feathers, shining golden-green,
When the dark plumage with the crimson beak
Has rustled shadowy from its splintered peak,
So trust thy friends, whose babbling tongues would charm
The lifted saber from thy foeman's arm,
Thy torches ready for the answering peal
From bellowing fort and thunder-freighted keel!

APPENDIX.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PREPAREDNESS.

[Extract from the annual report of Hon. L. M. Garrison, Secretary of War, November, 1915.]

* * * * * * *

The necessity of a nation having force commensurate with its responsibility is demonstrated by every correct process of reasoning founded upon fact. This is so whether the subject is considered in the light of the philosophy of government or of history. The use of force is the inherent essence of government. The very term itself is explicit—government, the right or power to compel obedience to law. Where there is no force to compel such obedience—that is, to govern—there is anarchy. Individuals give up the right of unregulated action when they form themselves into or become subject to a government. The progress and advancement of that which is summed up in the word "civilization" have been made possible solely because of government. Unless the individual is secure in his person and his property he has neither time nor inclination to devote himself to the cultivation of the mental, moral, or spiritual side of his nature. That security is assured to him by government, and government can only meet its responsibility of assurance by the possession of sufficient force to secure and preserve it. In our own earlier days the continued progress of the arts of peace was constantly interrupted by the necessity of banding together to prevent destruction by aggression from without. Later, and even after many of our largest civil communities were established, the individual citizen had to be prepared to protect himself, his family and his property, against the depredations of criminals, until the community organized and prepared a police force sufficient to assure the citizen of protection.

The identical necessity exists as to the nation. Unless the citizens thereof are assured that they can cultivate the arts of peace behind a barrier of force which will protect them from aggression and secure them in their rights, they are not free to cultivate such arts. Alike in the case of the individual, the internal municipality, and the nation, there must be a realization of the responsibility and a willingness and preparation to measure up to and meet it. This is equally true in respect to the threefold aspects of men and nations—physical, mental, and spiritual. Strength of mind, of body, and of spirit are prerequisites for progress along right lines. The essential basis of civilization is maintained by the triumph of what is right over what is wrong, and its progress can only be continued and assured so long as those who sustain the right are stronger than those who assert the wrong. Weakness inevitably results in overthrow, as the abundant instances of history demonstrate, both with respect to individuals, cities, and nations. The eye that is not diverted will see this, and the mind that is free from prejudice will grasp and realize it. It is necessary, therefore, to remove obstructions to clear vision and prejudice to clear thinking.

There are some who do not feel free to base their conduct upon a consideration of facts or conclusions of reason because of their interpretation of divine injunction. They do not believe in resistance to physical force, and those whose consciences are so convinced surrender life and all that they cherish and love at the behest of the aggressor. This attitude concerns the individual and him alone. Since it does not assume to be based upon fact or reason, it can not be dealt with on that basis. It can not be made the general rule of conduct under our form of government without departing from the basis upon which our Government is founded. Our Government is enjoined by the law of its being to use whatever force is necessary to protect the rights of the citizen. Before leaving this one is impelled to query upon what proper consideration there is based any distinction between the right or necessity or desirability of using mental force to repel error, moral force to repel evil, and physical force to repel wrong. It would seem, if reason were applied, that in each instance the situation is identical, and that if we should properly prepare our minds to be strong so that we can reject error and our moral characters to be strong so that we can reject evil we should likewise make our physical force strong in order that we may maintain the right as against those who would physically impose the wrong upon us.

There are others concerning whose clarity of vision we are not advised and concerning whose soundness of reason we are not informed because the attitude which they take is admittedly not based upon either vision or reason. They are those who predict that war will never come to this country, and assert that therefore precautions with respect thereto are unwise and needless. Since wars have come upon nations from the earliest date of recorded history to this moment, there is no basis of fact for such a position but an actual demonstration of the nonexistence of such basis. We were early warned that there would be wars and rumors of wars, and that nation would rise against nation and kingdom against kingdom, and the end was not yet; and that prediction has been fully verified. There is no basis and no foundation to conclude that this great evil has been eliminated, and it therefore must be treated as are all other existing evils and must be prepared against. Surely, as between resting upon prediction or upon preparation, wisdom would not hesitate.

There are others among us who are too intelligent and clear-sighted not to see the facts and to realize their significance, but who counsel inaction because they mistrust themselves and the Nation. Those to whom I now refer do not believe in the doctrine of nonresistance; they do not rest upon the prediction that an evil which has existed since the world began has ceased to exist and been abolished and should not therefore be considered as one to be prepared against; they even point out our potentiality of force, but they counsel against any preparation thereof. They base this counsel upon the expressed fear that if we possess force we will be induced to use it when we should not. This position ignores certain things which are essential to be maintained and is based upon certain assumptions which are not justified. It ignores the responsibilities which we have undertaken and which we must maintain at any self-sacrifice. It ignores the fact that if nations which possess force are likely to use it when they should not, some nation which has such force is likely to use it against us when it should not. It assumes that our Nation may not be trusted with force for fear that it may misuse it. I know of nothing which justifies such an indictment of our people and our Nation.

The eyes of many are blinded to fact and their minds closed to reason by an abhorrence of what they term "militarism," without any actual conception of just what this means or how it should effect the proper consideration of the subject. If by militarism they mean the placing of the military authority over the civil authority, or if they mean that the ordinary processes of government shall in any way be subservient to military authority or influence, no argument is needed to secure unanimity of opinion that this is not only undesirable, but in this country impossible. If they mean, however, that any reasonable, sensible precaution of a military nature is militarism, then they have reached a conclusion without the aid of clear vision or sound reasoning.

Those who really fear militarism, or, more accurately stated, those who dread real militarism, should be the strongest advocates of reasonable preparation. The latter is the preventive of militarism. If they unwisely defeat reasonable preparedness, they leave the country in a condition where the inevitable result of defeat, humiliation, or acute apprehension will be hasty and ill-advised provisions as to armament far beyond anything which calm reason and wise provision would deem necessary.

There will be those who assert that the proposed policy opposes the traditions of the people and runs counter thereto. This is mere assertion; it is not the fact, and in truth the fact is to the contrary. The proposed policy is exactly in keeping with our traditions. Such traditions are for a standing force, small in relation to population, and a trained and equipped force much larger in proportion thereto, but not constantly under arms. This is exactly what the plan proposes.

There will also be those who will express regret that the policy heretofore pursued of lack of proper military precautions is to be departed from, because it has been invaluable as an example to the rest of the world, and should not remedy the lack because we would then cease to be such an example. It should be observed, first, in considering this point of view, that it entirely overlooks the vital and imperative duty to ourselves which requires that we should protect and defend that which we cherish and hold dear. Furthermore, it overlooks the fact that, although we have been just the example that they desire throughout the more than a century and a quarter of our existence, the results existing in the world to-day do not warrant the belief that our example has had any beneficial effect.

There are some who decry taking any precautions or making any preparations of the military power of the Nation because they say it will not prevent war, but will provoke it. Taking up the last question first, the answer has already been made to this. Men and nations must prepare to meet their responsibilities; if it is inadvisable to develop strength sufficient to repel wrong because such developed strength may be misused, human nature has indeed reached an impasse. Why should it be presumed that a just man or a just nation will cease to be just because it has the power to be unjust? We must either trust others or trust ourselves.

As to preparation for war preventing war, that misstates the position of the sensible advocate of preparedness. It is not asserted that it prevents it, but it is asserted that it tends to prevent it, and in many instances has been demonstrated to have prevented it. The military force prepared by the municipality—that is, the police—does not prevent crime, but it tends to prevent it, and it undoubtedly minimizes the aggressions of the wrongdoer against the lives and property of the rightdoer.

So long as right and wrong exist in the world there will be an inevitable conflict between them. The right-doers must be prepared to protect and defend the right as against the wrong. Their preparation will tend to prevent the triumph of wrong; and in those instances in which it does not prevent the attempt it can prevent the success of the attempt.

Somewhat in the same vein is the insistence of those who say "I will not consent to the Nation having arms until I know against whom it intends to use them." Identical reasoning would result in saying "I will not place a club or revolver in the hands of a policeman until he tells me the name of the criminal he intends to use them upon," or, "I will not agree to prepare fire apparatus unless you point out where the fires are going to be." Wisdom demands precaution; precaution demands preparation; preparation is against the day of evil from any quarter.

If the only protection against evil was such as was undertaken after the evil was upon us there would be constant and steady retrogression in human affairs.

Another stumbling block to some is the suggestion that no preparation should be made and no precaution should be taken because no one can fortell how much we may have to meet and what we will require to meet it. Here again the idea embodied in this suggestion would stay all human progress. No one can foretell the future with accuracy with respect to anything in human life. Health, wealth, outbursts of nature, and human outbreaks—no one can surely foretell anything concerning them. If we should not prepare ourselves reasonably with respect to these things because we can not be sure that we have protected ourselves against all conceivable possibilities, we would be deliberately choosing the path of folly and not that of wisdom. The two extremes of any proposition are the foolish ones; the reasonable mean is the wise one.

There will be some who assert that the devastating effects and the horror produced by the war now being waged make it certain that war will be avoided for a long period of time after the close of the present war. They will argue that the exhaustion of resources and the recollection of the awful suffering will have the effect of deterring nations from entering upon war.

What basis is there for such belief? Certainly such basis can not be found in history—our own or that of other nations.

The colonists had barely passed through the exhaustive and devastating wars with the Indians before they engaged in the Revolution. That war was surely as exhausting to our meager resources and as productive of horrible conditions as can well be imagined, and yet within a very short time after its close we were on the verge of war with two of the greatest nations of the world, and finally went to war with one of them.

The War between the States had every element of exhaustion and every untoward effect which war produces, and yet at its close we took a position in support of the Monroe doctrine which would inevitably have brought on war with one of the great nations of the world if it had not yielded to our insistence.

History literally abounds with examples. Without going further back than the era of the Napoleonic wars, we find that the strain upon resources and the horrors produced by war did not result in the avoidance of war. Probably as striking an example as any is the most recent—the Balkan States have engaged in two wars within three years, straining their material resources to the utmost and attended by all the horror that war produces, and, notwithstanding that, some of them are already engaged in the present war and there is much discussion as to whether others will not also be so engaged.

The only conclusion that can possibly be drawn from the facts is that there is no justification for the belief that because there has been war there will be no more war.

There will be those who believe and assert that the time when war can be avoided by negotiation or arbitration or other like means will be advanced if we refrain from adopting a proper military policy, but will be set back if we do so. It is difficult to comprehend on what basis such a belief can reasonably rest, and therefore it is difficult to reason about it. It seems to rest upon the idea that if we are feeble and weak in action we will be strong and persuasive in counsel; that by avowedly neglecting to prepare to protect our rights we will be the better able to secure their protection by appeal, by arbitration, or by argument. This is not so in any analogous case, saving only that in which the patronizing recognition of weakness induces the strong to abstain from assaulting the weak. In all other instances he who has taken up his burden in a manly way, has seen his duty and has done it, is the one who realizes the necessity of justice, insists upon its being meted out to others, and secures it for himself. No one need have the slightest fear that our voice for peaceful settlement of the quarrels of nations will receive any the less attention because we stand for the right and are prepared to maintain it at any proper cost. On the contrary, the voice of such a one is always listened to and usually controls.

There will be some who approach the subject from the wrong end, and who, by failing to take the proper steps, fail to reach the proper conclusion. Without any accurate knowledge of the causes, they will point to the aggregate of cost, and by failing to consider the necessity of incurring the cost they will fail to appreciate its necessity. Primarily it is true that when a matter is considered from the standpoint of responsibility no one has a right to count the cost. An individual or a nation who has undertaken a responsibility or duty must measure up to it in the fullest spirit of self-sacrifice. But without necessity of resorting to such radical considerations, it is obvious that any necessary cost of government is not only justified but imperative. The first consideration, therefore, should be, Has the nation a responsibility and a duty in this respect? If it has, what is necessary in order that it should take the means commensurate with such duty or responsibility? Secondly, what is the proper cost of taking such means? And, thirdly, how shall we secure that which supplies the means?

In this connection it is essential to keep certain things constantly in mind. In countries where the service of the individual is required by the nation in the same way that his money is required of him by taxation the cost to the nation is minimized and is largely occasioned by the purchase of material supplies. It is likewise true that the standard of living is much higher in this country than elsewhere; that rent, fuel, clothing, food, and other necessaries of life are higher, just as wages and salaries are. It should also be remembered that the vast territory and the small number of troops therein increase the cost of transportation here over its cost elsewhere to a very great amount. Comparisons between the cost of a military establishment in this country and in any other country are not only useless but harmful and misleading if they fail to take into account and accurately determine the effect of the matters just referred to upon the totals in the respective nations concerned.

Any present consideration of the subject of military policy requires us to recognize that at this time the people of the country believe that a safe reliance can be placed upon their patriotism, and that it is not necessary to resort to compulsory requirements to provide assurance for the Nation's safety.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. KELLEY. To ask unanimous consent for a couple of minutes to make a statement relative to the degree of completion of the submarines already authorized, in order that it may follow the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] asks unanimous consent for two minutes in order to make a statement in regard to submarines, notwithstanding the special order. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, there are at the present time 39 submarines authorized. Some have not yet been begun. There is one ship, authorized in 1911, which has not yet been completed. There are eight ships, authorized in 1912, that have not yet been delivered, but it is expected that they will be delivered early in 1916. There are five ships, authorized in 1913, that are in various degrees of completion, but it is not expected they will be delivered until 1917. There are seven ships, authorized in 1914, and they are expected to be delivered at various times through 1917 and 1918. There are 16 ships, authorized on the 3d of March, 1915, none of which have yet been begun. In addition are the two seagoing submarines authorized in March, 1915, which have not yet been contracted for; making a total of 39 submarines authorized, but either not yet begun or in various stages of completion.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield there? Can the gentleman tell us why the completion of those is so long delayed? Why could they not be completed within a year?

Mr. KELLEY. I want to say to the gentleman from North Dakota I do not know. I asked the gentleman from Massachusetts if he knew of any reason why these ships could not be completed more rapidly, and the gentleman from North Dakota heard what the gentleman from Massachusetts said in reply.

Mr. NORTON. Have appropriations been made for those vessels?

Mr. KELLEY. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized, under the special order of the House, for one hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I want to take the House into my confidence. I had not intended to make a speech on preparedness at this time. I had not thought particularly of making a speech on preparedness at any time, though I have some very definite views with regard to the matters that are embraced in that all-embracing term. When, however, the other day the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TAVENNER] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asked and obtained time to talk on that subject, and I realized that what they said, as entered in that entertaining family journal, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, would go to the people during the Christmas holidays containing the views they held, it occurred to me that perhaps other and somewhat different views ought to be voiced, in order that the very few people who do read the RECORD might know that there were some differences of opinion on the subject in the House. It follows, therefore, that what little preparation I have made, and it has been limited, has been made in the last couple of days in the midst of other duties, and I apologize to the House, for this is so important a question that one ought not discuss it at length without a good deal of thought and preparation.

I am for preparedness. I want to thank the Speaker for the word "reasonable" as a qualifying adjective. I am for "reasonable" preparedness, and, being for preparedness, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has rather discouraged me, and after hearing him I enter upon my discussion in a rather disturbed frame of mind, for, as I understand it, he tells us that although we have expended in 12 years $1,331,821,032 on our Navy, to-day we have a Navy whose fastest ships are slower than the slowest ships upon which the nations now at war are depending and have actually used in this awful struggle; and although we have been all these years building submarines, and were really the people who first began to build them, we have but one that can dive. [Laughter.] And while Americans were the inventors and first promoters of the flying machine, we have only a measly half dozen that can fly. And being for preparedness, praying God that my country may be prepared, you can imagine the frame of mind I am in when I think of how little we have, in the opinion of the gentleman from Massachusetts, for all the millions we have expended.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen! [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Well, of course I do not altogether agree with my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. I am rather inclined to think that the Navy and every factor of it would give a good account of itself if it were brought into conflict with a foreign navy. I can think of no subject with regard to which it is so important that it shall be discussed in a spirit of nonpartisanship. That being so, I am thankful that the leaders of our party in the House and Senate have assured the country that this great question of national defense will be discussed from a nonpartisan standpoint and without partisan feeling, so far as we can prevent that sort of thing creeping into our discussion. And because I believe this question should be considered without partisanship, I am delighted that I am able to say that I agree very largely—very largely, indeed—with the substance of what has been said by the President of the United States on this great question of preparation. [Applause.]

My agreement, however, is not with what the President said on December 6, 1915, but with what he said on December 8, 1914. [Applause.] I will never forget those words, for they were splendid, manly words. The language was that fine, clear-cut, beautiful English of which the President is a master. At the close of that message I said to a friend, "I have only one criticism of what the President has said, or of his having said it, and that is it seems to me the President has set up a straw man and then proceeded to demolish it, for surely nowhere within the Republic are there any considerable number of people who would propose or suggest a plan of militarism and bristling, stupendous armament such as he warned us against." Possibly some of the gentlemen who were here on that occasion have forgotten what was then said. Some gentlemen were not here then who are here to-day, and with your permission I will read a few of the patriotic words of the President, delivered to the Congress of the United States on the 8th day of December, 1914. The President, after having discussed a variety of subjects, finally, in closing, said he would refer to two, the question of economy in expenditures and the question, then agitating the country, of preparedness. After discussing the question of economy he said:

> The other topic I shall take leave to mention goes deeper into the principles of our national life and policy. It is the subject of national defense.
> It can not be discussed without first answering some very searching questions. It is said in some quarters that we are not prepared for war. What is meant by being prepared? Is it meant that we are not ready upon brief notice to put a nation in the field, a nation of men trained to arms? Of course we are not ready to do that; and we shall never be in time of peace so long as we retain our present political principles and institutions. And what is it that it is suggested we should be prepared to do? To defend ourselves against attack? We have always found means to do that, and shall find them whenever it is necessary without calling our people away from their necessary tasks to render compulsory military service in times of peace.
> Allow me to speak with great plainness and directness upon this great matter and to avow my convictions with deep earnestness. I have tried to know what America is, what her people think, what they are, what they most cherish and hold dear. I hope that some of their finer passions are in my own heart—some of the great conceptions and desires which gave birth to this Government and which have made the voice of this people a voice of peace and hope and liberty among the peoples of the world, and that, speaking my own thoughts, I shall, at least in part, speak theirs also, however faintly and inadequately, upon this vital matter.
> We are at peace with all the world. No one who speaks counsel based on fact or drawn from a just and candid interpretation of realities can say that there is reason to fear that from any quarter our independence or the integrity of our territory is threatened. Dread of the power of any other nation we are incapable of. We are not jealous of rivalry in the fields of commerce or of any other peaceful achievement. We mean to live our own lives as we will; but we mean also to let live. We are, indeed, a true friend to all the nations of the world, because we threaten none, covet the possessions of none, desire the overthrow of none. Our friendship can be accepted and is accepted without reservation, because it is offered in a spirit and for a purpose which no one need ever question or suspect. Therein lies our greatness. We are the champions of peace and of concord. And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it, because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity such as has seldom been vouchsafed any nation—the opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations. This is the time above all others when we should wish and resolve to keep our strength by self-possession, our influence by preserving our ancient principles of action.

The President then went on to discuss certain matters relating to our naval policy and the National Guard, and then proceeded as follows:

> More than this carries with it a reversal of the whole history and character of our polity. More than this, proposed at this time, permit me to say, would mean merely that we had lost our self-possession; that we had been thrown off our balance by a war with which we have nothing to do, whose causes can not touch us, whose very existence affords us opportunities of friendship and disinterested service which should make us ashamed of any thought of hostility or fearful preparation for trouble. This is assuredly the opportunity for which a people and a government like ours were raised up, the opportunity not only to speak but actually to embody and exemplify the counsels of peace and amity and the lasting concord which is based on justice and fair and generous dealing.

[Applause.]

Then the President said that he turned from this subject—that it was not new; that there was really no need of discussing it; that "we shall not alter our attitude toward these things," and closed with the admonition, "Let there be no misconception. The country has been misinformed. We have not been negligent of national defense. We are not unmindful of the great responsibility that rests upon us." The President closed his message with the following paragraph:

> I close, as I began, by reminding you of the great tasks and duties of peace, which challenge our best powers and invite us to build what will last, the tasks to which we can address ourselves now and at all times with free-hearted zest and with all the finest gifts of constructive wisdom we possess. To develop our life and our resources; to supply our own people, and the people of the world as their need arises, from the abundant plenty of our fields and our marts of trade; to enrich the commerce of our own States and of the world with the products of our mines, our farms, and our factories, with the creations of our thought and the fruits of our character—this is what will hold our attention and our enthusiasm steadily, now and in the years to come, as we strive to show in our life as a nation what liberty and the inspirations of an emancipated spirit may do for men and for societies, for individuals, for states, and for mankind.

That was the view of the President a year ago. Since that time the war in Europe has widely extended its area. Frightful and appalling happenings, blotting out the lives of many of our citizens, and acts on the part of belligerent Governments destructive of our commerce, have brought us into trying diplomatic relationship with several of the warring powers. A considerable part of our industrial and commercial activities have been diverted from their usual and normal channels and turned to the processes of making and supplying the instruments and instrumentalities of war. Out of this war business have grown mushroom fortunes. Its development has been attended by feverish speculation, incredible stock inflation, and all of the unhealthy and regrettable brood of influences and tendencies which such blood merchandising always produces.

Out of the excitement, fever, and hysteria of the times has come every imaginable form, plan, purpose, and propaganda of extension, expansion, and enlargement of military establishments. It is a time when we may well recall Kipling's prayerful refrain:

> O Lord of hosts be with us yet,
> Lest we forget, lest we forget!

In the midst of the conditions I have described and out of the atmosphere which they produce, we have recently heard a message from the President profoundly differing in tone and temper from his utterances of a year ago. The President reminds us that the European war "has swept within its flame" some portion of our own hemisphere, but he assures us that he has "no thought of any immediate or particular danger arising out of our relations with other nations," and expresses a confident hope "that no question in controversy between this and other Governments will lead to any serious breach of amicable relations." And yet in these conditions of safety and of confident hope of peace, present and future, the President, in his message of December 7, at the opening of this Congress, outlined and recommended a military and naval program of vast dimensions and involving tremendous expenditures, a program the like of which has, so far as I can now recall, never been heretofore suggested, much less approved or recommended, by anyone occupying a responsible civil position in the Nation. A program which, had it been presented to him a year ago, would, I am quite confident, have been instantly and emphatically spurned by the President. Had it been suggested at any time by a Republican occupying a position of responsibility and authority it would have met, in the severest terms, the instant and unanimous condemnation of practically every Democrat in the land.

THE COST OF THE PROGRAM.

The revolutionary character of the President's proposal can perhaps be more quickly grasped by a consideration of its cost than of the items which constitute its framework. The carrying out of the plan would necessitate estimated increased expenditures, over our present large expenditures for military purposes, amounting in five years to approximately $725,000,000, or a total expenditure for military purposes of over $2,000,000,000. This would be followed by an estimated annual expenditure of $265,000,000 for the Navy and $162,000,000 for the Army, or $427,000,000 annually for military purposes. Inasmuch as the sum estimated for the Army at the end of the five-year period is $56,000,000 less than the sum estimated for the fourth year of the program, we have so good an authority as the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in a recent article in the North American Review, that this reduction is not likely to be realized; and, further, when we take into consideration the fact that additional and supplemental estimates are already coming in, and that first estimates of this sort are uniformly notoriously low, we may conservatively estimate the expenditure for military purposes alone, under the President's plan, of at least $500,000,000 per annum. That is more than the total net annual expenditures of the Government for all purposes up to about 10 years ago. It is considerably more than double our average annual expenditure for the past 10 years for military purposes. It is approximately three times the sum which Germany has been expending annually the last 12 years on her vast army and her navy. With the amount of money thus proposed to be absorbed for military purposes, we could build five Panama Canals every four years.

France and Germany have been held up to the children in our schools ever since we can remember as horrible examples of a republic and a monarchy burdened with militarism, and our President proposes we shall spend three times as much as they have been spending for military purposes.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Of course the gentleman knows that the difference in the pay roll of the German Navy and the German Army alone is very great, and that we expend $27,000,000 a year more in pay, does he not? I am not speaking of pay in the navy yards, I am speaking just of the pay of the men in the fleet.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that the difference in cost of both our Army and Navy is largely due to the difference in the pay; that in Switzerland a soldier receives practically no pay; that in Germany he receives about $2 a month and in France something less. The very fact that the shadow of other enormous military establishments compels those people, in their opinion, to submit to this grinding militarism, which our people would not tolerate for a moment, is one of the strongest reasons why we should stop and consider when we propose to enter on such a plan. Is it your idea that the boys of America will serve for a few cents a day? Aye, freely, if necessary, when a foe invades, and to the extent of millions, but never in the piping times of peace.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Does the gentleman recall that we spent a round $1,000,000,000 in 12 years on our Navy, which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] thinks so slow and inadequate, more than Germany spent on hers, which now huddles cowering and shivering behind the fortifications of Heligoland.

Mr. HENSLEY. Do you think the difference in the pay of the men makes up that amount?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I am not sure about that. I think perhaps the gentleman from Missouri, who is a member of the Naval Committee, is better informed on that than I am. It is the biggest item. There are some other important items, but it is the largest.

In the Bulgarian Army officers of the lower grades receive about the same amount we pay a raw recruit in the ranks. A brigadier general receives about what we pay a captain.

I think it may illuminate the subject somewhat to place in the RECORD the figures of expenditures of the leading nations of Europe for military purposes for the 12 years prior to the outbreak of the European war compared with ours. They are as follows:

Army and naval expenditures.

Germany	2,110,508,119
France	2,563,873,726
Great Britain	4,467,335,988

As all these figures, except those for Great Britain, are for a period of peace, the total for Great Britain should, in order to make the showing a fair one of peace conditions, be reduced by about one and a half billion dollars as the estimated expenditure on account of the Boer War. This would leave her ordinary military expenditures for the period about the same as ours.

I do not quote these staggering figures with the idea that we should neglect necessary or adequate provision for defense on account of cost. If I shared in the fears and forebodings which encompass some of our people in a nightmare of apprehension, I should not hesitate to help appropriate even as vast sums as I have mentioned. I am fortunate in that I am not panicky in my disposition and that none of my constituents deal in war munitions; furthermore, we have the assurance of the President, who ought to know more about it than anyone else, that we are not fronting any impending or probable assault. [Applause.]

WHEN WE ARE TO BE ENGULFED.

The favorite period selected by amateur military strategists and alarmist scribblers for staging the impending military cataclysm that is to engulf us—now that we seem temporarily to have escaped the Japanese peril—is immediately after the close of the European war. The selection by our alarmist friends of this period of exhaustion and impoverishment and weariness of blood letting as the date of our overthrow as a people affords striking evidence of the fact that their fears and their imagination have grown in proportion as their sense of humor has diminished. That time can not be very far distant. It is certain not to be five years hence. It is more likely to be within the neighborhood of five months. Therefore the President, in common with all who are advocating enormous expenditures for dreadnaughts and preparations available five years hence, have aimed their artillery so high that they have completely overshot the mark.

If we stand in the danger that the alarmists claim we do, the great and ambitious military programs running into the distant future are pathetically and ridiculously inadequate to meet the situation and afford us the protection that it is claimed we require. If our situation is as alarming as some seem to think, we need preparation at once; and troops to fully man our fortifications, reserves of field artillery, aerial fleets, submarines, destroyers, and mines for coast and harbor defense, the most effective of all defense material, can be provided in a few months and at a comparatively small cost. If I gave credence to the sinister designs credited by the alarmists to some European powers, I should not want to depend on a limited and uncertain continental army four years hence; I should want a million men at least under arms at once.

If we are confronted with the danger that some of these folks say that we are, and that our good President has unfortunately seemed to catch a glimpse of, great heavens, a continental army five years from now will never save us. [Laughter and applause.] If I were as trembling and fearful as some folks seem to be, and had the authority, before 24 hours had passed the trumpets would sound and a million men would be called to the colors for immediate defense. If our condition is such as has been suggested by some of the authors of the scare literature that has been so widely and freely circulated, in Heaven's name let us cancel all of the profitable contracts which our folks have with foreign nations, and set them to work turning out artillery, submarines, and aerial fleets now for our defense. [Applause.] If we can build submarines for Germany and Russia and England and have them available before this talk of peace shall crystallize, in Heaven's name why can we not get them for our own use? We can buy and make, if necessary, in six months, more than anybody has claimed we need of field artillery, flying machines, mines, and submarines, and secure the needed force to fully man our splendid coast defenses, and for less outlay than the sum that my friend from Massachusetts fixes as the cost of one or two of these swift heavily armed ships that he wants built and equipped and ready for action from five to eight years from now. [Laughter and applause.]

SUPERDREADNAUGHTS VERSUS DEFENSIVE CRAFT.

I have said, and I repeat, that so far as military preparation and national defense is clearly necessary and imperative we can not stop to count the cost. The President has assured us that not only are we at peace, but we are likely to remain at peace. It is my personal opinion that we would have a hard time getting into war with anybody now or in the near future, were we ever so anxious for a scrap, and for a variety of reasons, which I should be glad to elaborate had I the time.

It is true, however, that the European war has taught us some things, and has clearly suggested others, as to the manner and method of modern warfare, of which we certainly ought to take heed. The most unquestioned of these relates to the increased use of artillery; the most impressive, to the value of mines and submarines and destroyers as weapons of offense and defense, and back of all looms the portentious question as to whether or not the dreadnaught shall, in the future, play a commanding rôle in war.

Why, gentlemen, the mightiest of them all, the most powerful and glorious of England's dreadnaughts, the Queen Elizabeth, steamed past Gibraltar's frowning heights to the Dardanelles only to be ingloriously driven back by a Turkish smoothbore. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Do I understand the gentleman to compare the amateur strategists with the naval experts?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I am an amateur. I admit that.

Mr. GARDNER. So am I.

Mr. MONDELL. I am, however, like the fellow I once knew who, having been criticized for expressing a certain view in regard to a matter to which he had given some thought, said: "I may not know much, I grant that, but what little I do know I know just as well as anybody." [Laughter.]

I do know, and the gentleman from Massachusetts knows, what happened to the Queen Elizabeth. She steamed up to the Turkish batteries, but she promptly backed out. She is too valuable to fight. [Laughter and applause.]

The President told us about being too proud to fight. That was some time ago. He now wants ships to be launched a few years from now that are too valuable to be placed in danger. An $18,000,000 boat costs too much money to be recklessly exposed to hostile gunfire. The sinking of such a ship leaves too big a hole in the battle line, and you can not afford to fight with that kind of a machine. It is a good thing to bluff with. [Laughter.] It uses a lot of the people's money, keeps the munition factories going, and looms large on the sea and in the pages in the naval yearbook. [Applause.]

Referring for a moment to the matter of naval experts, to whom the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred, I recall that in the message of the President, from which I have quoted, he said, among other things:

> When will the experts tell us just what kind we should construct, and when will they be right for 10 years together, if the relative efficiency of craft of different kinds and uses continues to change as we have seen it change under our very eyes in these last few months?

Clearly the President had in his mind at that time, as everyone else had and as a great many people still have, a serious doubt of the effectiveness of dreadnaughts and superdreadnaughts. The Queen Elizabeth still keeps out of reach of the Turkish batteries. The German fleet is still seeking safety behind land batteries. The mighty English fleet rides uselessly somewhere, cowering behind a cordon of steel nets and small craft. Only a year ago the naval experts were all for superdreadnaughts. Elaborate arguments were made before committees and printed in service journals to prove that one superdreadnaught, by the enormous weight and force of its broadside fire, could smother and crush and sink or put out of commission, in detail, a whole bevy of lighter and smaller ships, even though their guns were as large and their combined strength vastly greater. The very latest pronouncement we have had on the subject from the head of the Navy, and that within the last few days, is that we must depend on the number more than the size of our ships. What has become of all of the convincing arguments of the experts relative to the necessity, the overwhelming advantage, of vast tonnage and size and enormous weight of metal in broadside fire; and how about the change of heart with regard to the battle cruiser, the ship that is to cost $18,000,000, according to my friend from Massachusetts.

An $18,000,000 dreadnaught is the picture that rises in the minds of a lot of people, when they think of preparedness. The humble but terrible submarine, the effective flying machine, the deadly mine, those things which you can get quickly and cheaply do not appeal to them. They do not cost enough. [Laughter.] Their manufacture would not keep all the factories at work. While I am anxious to have the factories working, I am not in favor of their working on that class of merchandise.

While I have very serious doubts of the necessity of any considerable expansion of our naval and military establishments, I shall support, as I always have, a reasonable program—what I think is a reasonable program. That is what I have done in the last 20 years. I shall go just as far as I feel that it is proper and right and necessary to do, in view of the kind of people we are and of the conditions that surround us.

I have always supported a program for a steady and uniform development of the Navy. In that respect my record is very different from that of certain gentlemen who are now approving vast increases. In the present state of affairs, with the uncertainty which exists in the mind of almost everyone, except a few experts, as to the character of the big ship of the future and in view of the fact that big ships can not, in any event, judging from our past record, be completed in less than three to six years, I should be inclined to halt the big-ship program as to new authorizations, to hurry forward work on those already authorized and building and turn our attention to small craft which can be quickly built and which the history of the European war has proven can effectively protect our coasts against the near approach of battleships or troop-ships. If the large number of submarines already authorized—some 40, I think, have been referred to by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]—were speedily built and such additional number as is deemed advisable, we need have no fear of attack, particularly if we utilize mines as effectively as they have been utilized in the European war zone.

I did not believe it was advisable to fortify the Panama Canal. I believed, and I still believe, that the canal would be safer without fortifications. Congress took another view of it, and I have voted for the fortifications and for the necessary expenditure for the housing of a garrison. Congress having, apparently with the approval of the country, provided for the fortification and the garrisoning of the canal, we must add, as I suggested at the time would be necessary, several thousand men to our Army to provide for the Panama garrison. There seems to be general approval of a goodly garrison in Hawaii. That will call for some addition to our regular establishment. Our coast defenses, the splendid character of which is clearly pointed out in the recent report of the Chief of Coast Artillery, need several thousand more men for their complete manning. We need a larger air fleet.

All of these things can be provided quickly and without great cost, without any additional expenditure above the average expenditure of the past, if we do not authorize new big ships which may be out of date before they are in commission. We should immediately remedy the foolish mistake, made under this administration, of a long-term enlistment in the Army and provide for a comparatively brief term of enlistment, which will give us a better class of recruits, and if we discourage reenlistment will furnish us a considerable number of trained men available in time of necessity. President Wilson's continental army will not, in my opinion, meet the approval of any considerable number on either side of this House.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Cox). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. BORLAND. Am I right in believing that the gentleman will continue to support Fort D. A. Russell? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is eminently right, because Fort D. A. Russell is a splendid post, and, contrary to the views of gold-laced fellows who every time they go to one of Wilhelm's reviews of a hundred thousand men in a bunch want that kind of thing at home, and in spite of the fact that they want to put all of the troops near the big cities, I still believe the place to keep them is in the posts throughout the country, and Fort D. A. Russell is one of the best. [Laughter.]

AN INVASION THAT IS CERTAIN.

But turning our thoughts from this fear of armed invasion, let us recall that there is another invasion that is impending, the certainty of which is not denied by anyone who has given thought to it. That invasion has been discussed within the last 24 hours by the Secretary of Commerce of this administration. It is an invasion that is certain to come upon us at the end of this war, an invasion of the cheaply produced products of the impoverished people of the late warring countries.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield. I have not the time. I would like to, but I will yield a little later if I have the time. In preparing in a reasonable way for the armed invasion, which is in the last degree improbable, will you gentlemen on the other side adopt and accept as an instrument for supplying the sinews of war, supplying them in abundance and without direct burden, a method which will unquestionably protect us from that other invasion of which I speak, the industrial invasion which is impending? Will you do it? Why, of course you will not. I feel confident that whatever program you adopt you will insist on laying the burden of it unfairly, inequitably, directly, and I can not justify myself in having directly or indirectly by any act of mine given you the excuse for laying additional direct burdens in time of peace on an already overburdened people for an expenditure the necessity for which is very questionable. The program which I shall support, which I hope will be a program more for immediate defense than for future offense, will be even more moderate than it otherwise would be, because I know the funds to pay for it will, under your legislation, be levied directly, inequitably, unjustly, on a comparative few of our people.

I do not propose to be put in the position of having voted for enormous expenditures and then having refused to help pay the bills, and I do not approve the President's proposed tax on automobiles, gasoline, bank checks, and other things any more than I do his military program. Therefore, my disposition to be moderate is strengthened by the fact that I do not propose to help give you gentlemen on the Democratic side opportunities to pass from chewing gum to gasoline in laying additional burdens upon our people. If you will agree that whatever you raise will be raised at the customhouses, making the importer pay for the preparedness you say is necessary against his evil intent, making the foreigner pay for the preparedness you provide out of the fear you have of him as a future armed foe, I will be inclined to be a little more liberal in my view of what out of excess of caution it may be well to do.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield only for a question, as my time is short. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with a lot of people in this time of war and stress and nervous strain is that they have lost sight of the fact that our defense is, after all, no matter how many battleships we build, how many men we have in arms, not the force ready at any given moment to hurl at an enemy, but the reserve of a hundred million earnest, patriotic, virile citizens. The trouble with all the gentlemen who edit these alarming stories of possible invasion is that they assume that if all the impossible, improbable things they conjure up in their feverish imaginations were to happen, and some great city of the coast were levied upon, the American people from the Pacific to the Atlantic, in all the glorious South and the splendid Mississippi, on the plains and in the mountains, would be so miserably pusillanimous that they would forthwith make terms with the invader. I believe it to be a fact that there is not any nation on this earth, armed and equipped as well as the best of them is or has been, that would dare or that has the slightest purpose of attempting to invade our territory.

I wish I had the words to express the scorn I feel for those yellow-streaked, soft-hearted Americans, those almost treasonable Americans, who write tales of imaginary invasions which, if what they suggest were in any wise possible, would prove us to be the most pusillanimous, spineless, and unworthy folk that ever lived on the face of the earth, instead of being what we are, the most upstanding, individually effective, intensely patriotic, vigorous, and forceful people in the world. Why, even though every city of the coast were laid waste, between the two oceans we have men enough and resources enough to drive into the sea, beyond the sea, and punish in a way that would never be forgotten to the end of time any people who would dare invade our territory or have the temerity to attempt to conquer us. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, every minute since you left your homes this morning you have been the possible victims of assault, deadly and murderous. There is not a man you have met who could not have armed himself and attempted your life had he been so disposed. It would be just as sensible to talk about arming ourselves and loading ourselves with artillery, because we might be killed any minute, because the land is full of people with the physical power to kill us, as to talk of being constantly prepared for foreign attacks, which gentlemen of lively imagination anticipate or suggest but which are utterly unlikely. When I was a boy and a young man I lived in regions where it was fashionable to pack guns, and some carried them on both hips and under both arms. My recollection is that the fellow who had the most was generally the fellow who got shot. [Applause.] I never carried any, and I am still here.

THE PAN AMERICAN PLEA.

The President largely predicates his plea for enormous armies and armament on an elaborately developed argument as to the importance of defending this hemisphere against possible encroachments by monarchial powers. The enormous and expensive establishments he proposes and approves he views as a sort of Monroe doctrine, Pan American crusading force. Assuming for the sake of argument that there may be some possible danger of the war-exhausted nations of Europe discovering an inclination, or finding an excuse for violating our sister republics on this hemisphere, are the American people prepared for a continuous expenditure of $500,000,000 to guard against that possibility?

On the other hand, what will Pan America think about it? The entire spasm of frightful anticipation which seems to possess some of our people is based on a suspicion or a belief that a certain nation of Europe, with whom we have never had a quarrel; a nation which, notwithstanding the excesses of some of her military commanders, is composed of enlightened, humane, and Christian people; a nation whose proper and legitimate ambitions in no wise conflict with ours, is suddenly, out of victory or from the ashes of defeat, to pounce upon us, destroy our cities, and levy on our wealth.

If we have reached the time and condition when our national policies are builded on such fantastic and unworthy suspicions and assumptions as that, what may we expect South and Central America will think of our vast preparation and expenditure, ostensibly for their protection and defense? Our Latin-American friends have not all of them at all times been fully convinced of our peaceful and altruistic intentions toward them. What may we expect of them when they see our vast military preparations? They could find no reason, I grant you, in the present purpose or intention of any American to feel alarmed, but what an unhappy outcome it would be if, having armed and equipped ourselves to protect the Americas, as the President would have us, we frightened all America into arming and equipping against some possible future inclination, developed when we found ourselves with a costly military establishment and a growing itching to use it. The plan now proposed might well lead to a duplication on this continent and in this hemisphere of the conditions of armed and bristling militarism which have burdened, impoverished, and brutalized Europe.

I still hope that out of the suffering, misery, and impoverishment of the present European war there will come a desire and disposition to put a limit to the mad race for the upbuilding of military establishments. If it does, how important that we shall not, when these matters are considered, be in the midst of the development of ambitious military programs. If the war should not have that result, but should enthrone the military idea, rob the nations of conscience, and inspire them with a wicked desire for conquest, then the programs that have been proposed are all of them pitifully inadequate. If such a condition arose, universal compulsory service would be necessary, and our war outlay would run into billions annually. I am not willing to believe that such a condition is possible. In the meantime, whatever we do, let us do it strictly on a basis of defense, and quick defense at that.

Let us not forget that we are a people of peace, and that we hope when around the council table at the close of this war the question of disarmament shall be discussed it can not be said in favor of the maintenance of awful military burdens throughout the world that the great Republic of the west, secure in her strength, as all the world knows she is, is leading the world in feverish preparation for war. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. GARDNER. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by Hon. L. C. DYER, a Member of this House, and commander in chief of the United Spanish War Veterans, at the laying of the corner stone of the William McKinley Memorial at Niles, Ohio, on the 20th of last month. The speech is upon the subject of national defense.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of the Hon. LEONIDAS C. DYER, at the laying of the corner stone of the William McKinley Memorial at Niles, Ohio. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of preparedness for the national defense.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the national defense. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WAR REVENUE ACT.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, in the course of debate on the joint resolution to extend the operation of the war-revenue act, there was a good deal of criticism directed against the form of financial statement now made by the Treasury Department. Some of this comment was fair and perfectly admissible, involving a reasonable difference of opinion with the accountants of the Treasury Department as to the method of bookkeeping which prevails there. Some of the comment, on the other hand, was utterly unfair—it might almost be said to have been vituperative—involving unwarranted aspersions upon the Secretary of the Treasury, charging that member of the Cabinet, implicitly, with an attempt to "juggle" the figures of his department with intent to deceive the public as to the true condition of the Treasury. Of course, Mr. Speaker, if a gentleman has it in mind, as seemed to be the case with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], to give expression to a mood of levity by indulging in sarcastic strictures on a Cabinet minister, he is within his rights; he is at liberty to give free rein to his humor. If another Member has it in mind, as obviously was the case with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], to severely asperse a high public official, why he could not be expected to experience any difficulty in finding words suited to that species of objurgation. But it does seem to me that the dignity of this House would better be observed, and the fairness of debate respected, if Members would confine themselves to facts and to an orderly discussion of the problems we are sent here to solve.

I shall not affect a knowledge of accounting which I do not possess. I am not an actuary. I know nothing about bookkeeping. I must assume that the gentleman from Iowa had that ticket as a part of his classical course in Oberlin College, for he spoke upon the subject in a most didactic fashion. Nevertheless, I venture to think I have a reasonably clear understanding of plain propositions in ordinary accounting, and in fairness to the Treasury Department I want to put into the RECORD certain statements from experienced accountants, with whose opinions I quite fully agree, as to the method of bookkeeping at the Treasury Department. One of the criticisms made yesterday of two major items in the statement of the Treasury Department was directed to the fund provided for the retirement of the notes of banks which have discontinued or reduced their circulation. The charge, by implication, was that the Secretary of the Treasury had "juggled the figures" as to this item by making a criminal alteration in the method of accounting. Perhaps it would astonish the gentlemen making this aspersion if they were told that what the Secretary of the Treasury had done was to return to a system of accounting from which he had no lawful right to depart and which had prevailed at the Treasury Department for 23 years, under every Republican Secretary of the Treasury from the incumbency of Harrison to that of Taft, inclusive. Thus the bitter criticism leveled at the present Secretary of the Treasury shot over the head of Mr. McAdoo and found its mark in the person of every Republican Secretary of the Treasury who presided over the department within the last quarter of a century.

The simple fact is, Mr. Speaker, that pretty soon after the advent of the present administration this particular trust-fund item of the Treasury statement, which had been carried as an asset, was altered upon suggestion of a board of efficiency experts assigned to the department by the Civil Service Commission. The alteration, which was in contravention of law, transferred the item to the liability column of the financial statement, where expert accountants generally agree it belongs. The transfer, entirely proper from an accounting point of view, was contrary to the act of Congress passed July 14, 1890.

The Secretary did not know this at the time, and evidently the efficiency experts did not know it. Subsequently the Secretary of the Treasury ascertained the fact, and on the 1st day of October of the current year he gave directions that the statement be changed to the form provided by law, and which had been used at the Treasury Department for 23 years.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a single question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLASS. Certainly I do.

Mr. HILL. It does not make any difference who is right or wrong about that statement, but as a matter of fact ought trust funds belonging to a bank be counted as a part of the available funds of the Treasury?

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman wants my opinion, I will give it for what it is worth.

Mr. HILL. I do. I value the gentleman's opinion more than the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. I thank the gentleman for the compliment; I do not so highly value my judgment. However, I venture to think that trust funds should not be counted as available Treasury funds. Moreover, the efficiency experts of the Civil Service Commission and the committee on efficiency did not think so; they transferred this item to the liability side of the ledger. But, as I have already said to my friend from Connecticut, it subsequently appeared that a Republican Congress and a Republican administration thought that trust funds should be counted as an available balance; hence the law of 1890. That being the case, I say, it is utterly unfair—it nearly approximates shamelessness—for gentlemen to accuse the Secretary of the Treasury of "juggling" upon an item of that sort.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is criticizing very severely, in their absence, gentlemen on this side of the House in reference to one item in the Treasury statement. It is true, is it not, that the gentleman's statement of facts is contained in the Treasury statement every day as a footnote, and has been so contained for a long time?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; that is precisely the point I am trying to accentuate.

Mr. MANN. So that these gentlemen were aware of that fact?

Mr. GLASS. If they were, they did not mention it in their criticisms; and that is exactly of what I complain.

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman understood the speeches.

Mr. GLASS. I heard some of them; others I did not hear, nor are they yet printed in the RECORD. I heard the suggestion made that the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be put in jail for conforming the Treasury statement to a law that was passed by a Republican Congress and approved by a Republican President.

Mr. MANN. It was not in reference to that item. Of course, the gentleman ought to know that.

Mr. GLASS. The comment which I heard and to which I refer made no distinction as to items.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman would not intentionally mislead the House, but unintentionally he has misled the House.

Mr. GLASS. Of course the gentleman knows I have no purpose to mislead the House; moreover, I had not noticed the absence of the gentlemen to whom I have referred. I will not continue my remarks if it is thought that I would better wait until those gentlemen are here.

Mr. MANN. I do not make any special question about that, but——

Mr. GLASS. I desire to repeat that I did not observe the absence of the gentlemen. However, I am not saying anything disagreeable about them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is criticizing them very much more severely than they criticized the Secretary.

Mr. GLASS. As to that, there is a distinct difference of opinion. One of these gentlemen apparently wanted to see the Secretary of the Treasury put in jail. Surely I would not wish that in respect of the gentleman from Michigan. [Laughter.] I simply wanted to point out that the judgment passed by him on the present Secretary of the Treasury would have incarcerated every Republican Secretary of the Treasury who held the office under four Republican Presidents within the last 25 years.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is calling attention now to a matter and talking about a matter that is contained in a footnote of the Treasury statement and has been contained for a long time.

Mr. GLASS. That being so, is it fair to bring the accusation against the Secretary of the Treasury of trying to conceal something, trying to "pad the figures" of the Treasury Department? If what has been done is so plainly stated upon this Treasury exhibit that anybody can understand, is that "juggling"? Would you call that "padding"?

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. That is not what the criticism made by gentlemen on this side of the House was directed to. The gentleman ought to know that.

Mr. GLASS. I do not know it. The criticism from that side was directed against items that are clearly explained. I heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] make the criticism. His speech has not yet appeared in the RECORD, hence I can not directly quote from it, but I heard him make that criticism.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact that what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] said was that if any national banker in the United States employed the same system of bookkeeping as that employed by the Treasury Department, he would by the bank examiner be arrested and prosecuted and sent to jail?

Mr. GLASS. Which means——

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman state whether in his opinion the Treasury Department would permit any national banker to use the same system of bookkeeping as they are using in the Treasury Department to-day?

Mr. GLASS. I will say that at the very least——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like a little time; say, 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HILL. No; I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] says he desires 10 minutes when the gentleman from Virginia has concluded.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman who last addressed an inquiry to me [Mr. NORTON] that the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] was, in the last degree, extravagant. No national bank official would be put in jail for using a system of accounts that was merely contrary to the judgment of a particular expert accountant. Expert accountants differ widely as to how books should be kept. A national bank keeping its accounts contrary to the method prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency would be directed to alter its system; its officers would not be put in jail. But if the suggestion of the gentleman from Michigan had any application at all it meant that the Secretary of the Treasury is responsible for a financial statement so intentionally misleading that only his high official station shields him from criminal prosecution; that if somebody else in a subordinate place had committed a like offense he would have been put in jail.

Mr. NORTON. No; I think the gentleman from Virginia is mistaken in that. The inference that the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan carries to most of the Members of this House is, I believe, that a different system is employed in the Treasury Department than is permitted to be employed in national banks, and that is the only fair inference that can be drawn from the statement, which is as follows——

Mr. GLASS. Well, that is an interpretation of his language that differs from the conception which I have.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman from Michigan yesterday said, as appears on page 339 of the RECORD:

> Your Treasurer has changed the manner of bookkeeping in the United States Treasury; and if there were a national bank within the limits of the United States to-day that would adopt the manner of bookkeeping such as has been adopted by the Treasury of the United States, the bank examiner, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, would have every man connected with that bank in jail within 24 hours.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman for a speech, nor to permit him to project into my remarks a quotation from somebody else's speech.

Mr. NORTON. It is only fair to read the gentleman's exact statement, is it not?

Mr. GLASS. A great many things are fair that are not permissible when a Member has limited time in which to present his views. I do not want to yield all my time to the gentleman.

Mr. NORTON. But, let me ask the question——

Mr. GLASS. The difference between the gentleman and me is very simple. He attaches to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] a meaning that I do not think they convey.

Mr. NORTON. Is it not a fact that the Treasury Department would not to-day permit any national bank to use the same kind of bookkeeping that the Treasury Department is using?

Mr. GLASS. I do not think the same kind of bookkeeping used in the Treasury Department could be adapted to a national bank.

Mr. NORTON. Oh, that is it; one system for the Treasury Department and another system for national banks.

Mr. GLASS. There is nothing remarkable about that. One successful business house may not use the same system of accounting that another employs.

Mr. NORTON. But the gentleman——

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman does not want to take all my time?

Mr. NORTON. No; I do not; but it seems to me——

Mr. GLASS. Well, the gentleman is taking my time and without my consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia will proceed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, the whole trend of the criticism of the Treasury Department yesterday betrayed a purpose to severely arraign the Secretary of the Treasury for attempting to "deceive the public"; to "juggle" with the Treasury figures; to "pad" them, and to make it appear that the balance in the Treasury was greater than it really was. If that was not the purpose of the debate, what was it?

It was nothing else; and I want to indicate to the House how utterly unfair were these imputations upon the Secretary of the Treasury. I have already shown that one major change in the Treasury statement involved a return to the old Treasury form in vogue since July, 1890, based on a Federal statute passed by a Republican Congress and approved by a Republican President. All of the items in the Treasury exhibit, including the one just cited, were explained clearly and in detail by the Secretary of the Treasury when the change of statement was first made. In confirmation of this I hold in my hand a Treasury statement, as of date October 1, 1915, the whole front page of which is taken up with a detailed explanation of the alterations made in the old form. Now, I appeal to the fair judgment of the House to say if anything could be more straightforward than that? Can any critic honestly say that it betrays any purpose whatsoever to mislead the public? The whole transaction was aboveboard. Every solitary change made was explicitly pointed out on this front page of the Treasury statement.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, and shall insert in the RECORD, an article from the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle, obviously written by a man thoroughly familiar with every phase of accounting, who manifestly knows what he is talking about. This writer does not agree in all respects with the financial form of statement now being issued by the Treasury Department. In some ways the article is critical, but the writer has the fairness to declare that—

> It is due Secretary McAdoo to state that the nature of the changes by which this new result was reached and the reasons for them were set out at considerable length and with indisputable clearness in an announcement which occupied a whole page in the Treasury statement for October 1, 1915.

This Financial Chronicle justly arraigns those who "affect to believe that Secretary McAdoo's explanation is obscure," and adds, "The truth is what has been done could hardly have been set out with greater clarity."

In the course of yesterday's debate, when gentlemen were recklessly directing their bitter attacks upon the Secretary of the Treasury, was there one among them frank enough to tell all the truth as this public journal tells it? Can you point to a sentence in any speech made by a gentleman on that side from which it may even be inferred that the Secretary of the Treasury, when he altered the form of the financial statement, issued a detailed explanation of the changes made, clearly defining the reason for every alteration, so there was no possibility of deception? Mr. Speaker, this statement which I hold in my hand is literally free from any suspicion of disingenuousness. There is about it no semblance of a desire to "juggle figures," and I assert that the accusation against the Secretary of the Treasury of having "padded the Treasury statement" in order to deceive the public is grossly untrue.

In further evidence of this I shall insert in the RECORD a portion of this article from the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, of New York.

Mr. STEENERSON. Would the gentleman just as soon insert the whole article?

Mr. GLASS. Unquestionably I would.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have you do that.

Mr. GLASS. I will do that; there is no part of it that I desire to conceal. The gentleman heard me say distinctly that the writer criticizes in some respects the form of statement used by the Treasury Department.

Mr. Speaker, the other of the two major items in the Treasury statement which have been made the subject of criticism is the fund placed to the credit of disbursing officers. Should anybody ask a layman's opinion as to the proper place of this account on the ledger, I would be disposed to say that it should be segregated in the accounting as well as in fact. But that would be the opinion of a person who knows nothing of accounting. Totally disagreeing with that view, and strongly upholding the form adopted recently by the Treasury Department, are some of the best expert accountants in the United States.

I have here an article contributed to the Annalist, an auxiliary publication of the New York Times, devoted largely to financial and commercial matters. It is an article prepared by F. L. Gilbert, who is a certified public accountant of the State of New York, and manager of one of the largest business concerns in the country. Mr. Gilbert discusses this matter in detail, and I shall ask permission to insert his article in the RECORD. This certified public accountant of New York takes the view that the Secretary of the Treasury was perfectly right, from an accounting standpoint, in making the alteration indicated in the Treasury statement.

Mr. STEENERSON. What alterations, the $25,000,000 one?

Mr. GLASS. There is no question, there can be no question, of the fact that the Secretary was right in returning to the old form in respect to that item. It is a statutory form which prevailed for 23 years. He had no legal right to depart from it. Does the gentleman deny that?

Mr. STEENERSON. We will admit that it looked a little suspicious when the Treasury Department cut down the surplus turned over to him by the Republicans, and then when the surplus got low he increased the balance $85,000,000 over night.

Mr. GLASS. As a matter of fact, it was $34,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Sixty-two million.

Mr. GLASS. Counting both ways, it was $68,000,000. I have stated to the House that this alteration was mistakenly made by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the first instance, on the recommendation of a committee of efficiency experts supplied by the Civil Service Commission. Their recommendation was scientifically right, but unlawful.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have not criticized that, but the gentleman must admit that it looks suspicious when the general balance got down to $40,000,000, that by a change in bookkeeping it was swelled to $85,000,000 over night.

Mr. GLASS. If the gentleman wants to persist in his suspicion that the Secretary of the Treasury could be capable of intending to deceive the people of the United States——

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not intend that; I said it was a suspicious circumstance that they changed the bookkeeping, swelling the amount to $85,000,000 over night. Why did they not change it back immediately after they found it was illegal? Why did they wait until the balance got down to $42,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. What the gentleman means, in the last analysis, is that he persists in his suspicion that the Secretary of the Treasury altered the statement to deceive the public into believing that there was a larger balance in the Treasury than actually existed. I do not believe that the present Secretary of the Treasury is capable of such meanness, nor am I willing to believe that any Republican Secretary of the Treasury was ever capable of it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I do not claim that, but I say it looked a little that way.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes; the gentleman still persists in his suspicion. He is like the fellow who says: "If I have said anything offensive, I apologize for it, but am glad of it." As a matter of fact, what the Secretary did was to return to the old form of statement which he had mistakenly departed from.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why did he depart?

Mr. GLASS. I have told you; on the recommendation of efficiency experts supplied by the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. STEENERSON. Why did he depart from it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. GLASS. I think the Speaker states the case correctly, hence I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, when interrupted by the gentleman from Minnesota and diverted from the point, I was saying that I would insert in the RECORD an article by F. L. Gilbert, contributed to the Analyst, an auxiliary publication of the New York Times, devoted to financial matters, which points out in detail the changes in the Treasury statement, comments on them fairly, and justifies the Secretary of the Treasury in every item but one, from a strictly bookkeeping and accounting point of view. Thus it would seem, upon the testimony of an experienced public accountant of the State of New York, that the Secretary of the Treasury, from an accounting standpoint, was perfectly right in the alterations in the Treasury statement made by him.

Mr. Speaker, whatever may have been the Secretary's purpose—whether it was to force a larger Treasury balance, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] seems to suspect, or whether it was to obey the law—he was indisputably right in returning to that form of Treasury statement which was required by the Federal statutes, a form of Treasury statement, however, which this certified public accountant says is utterly defective, and which the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle says is utterly defective, although it had been used in the Treasury Department for 23 years under Republican administrations. I hereto append first the article contributed by Mr. F. L. Gilbert to the Analyst, of issue Monday, December 6, 1915, and next the article from the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle of November 20, 1915. They both afford a thorough vindication of the Secretary of the Treasury from the more or less absurd and, in some cases, malignant aspersions to which he has been subjected. I will also append, under leave to extend, the "Announcement" made by the Secretary of the Treasury on the front page of the Treasury statement of October 1, 1915, explaining in detail the alterations made and giving the reason for each change.

AN "O. K." ON MR. MCADOO'S ACCOUNTS—FROM A CAREFUL ANALYSIS AN EXPERT ACCOUNTANT REACHES THE CONCLUSION THAT THE DAILY STATEMENT GIVES A TRUE PICTURE OF THE TREASURY'S CONDITION.

(Written for the Analyst by F. L. Gilbert, C. P. A., New York manager of Ernst & Ernst.)

The public generally has been very much interested in the new form of daily statement adopted by the Secretary of the United States Treasury, William G. McAdoo, which made its first appearance on October 1, 1915. Many criticisms have been made, some even going so far as to claim the new statement is purposely "padded," in order to make the figures look better than the facts justly warrant.

This article is neither written for the purpose of drawing attention to the increase or decrease in the available cash balance, nor as a commentary on Government cash receipts and disbursements. It is prepared entirely for the purpose of showing from an accountant's viewpoint whether the statement is in accordance with sound accounting and business practice as approved by the best authorities.

The latest statement has, through a process of evolution under the present Treasury administration, been developed gradually from the old form of statement in use until June 30, 1913.

The principal change made then was in the form of the statement at that time. The old statement, before any changes were made in it by the present Secretary, was simply a statement of various kinds of cash on hand and funds on deposit with certain current liabilities deducted at different convenient places in the statement. On July 2, 1913, the statement of the general fund appeared in the form of an ordinary business balance sheet showing both assets and liabilities. From an accounting standpoint we believe this important change was a distinct improvement and is entirely correct. The current liabilities deducted at different places in the old statement, which we believe were hardly noticed at all by the ordinary layman, are in the new statement all grouped together and footed. They stand out plainly and distinctly.

A SEPARATE LIABILITY.

One other important change made in the statement on July 2, 1913, was the including as a liability the national bank notes redemption fund, amounting to $22,060,756. This, of course, reduced the net balance in the general fund by that amount. The plan of carrying this fund among the liabilities was continued to September 30, 1915, when it amounted to $23,096,069.50. This liability was eliminated in the new statement beginning October 1, 1915. This fund represents money deposited for the redemption of circulating national bank notes by national banks, which have discontinued or decreased their circulation. It is entirely separate from the 5 per cent redemption fund. Under the act of July 14, 1890, such deposits must be carried as a part of the public debt and not as a liability of the Treasury Department. It would certainly not be proper to carry the fund as a liability in both places. If strict accounting practice were followed without regard for the law we believe this fund would continue to be carried as a current liability. The law says it must be treated otherwise, and this appears to be the reason for dropping it in the new statement of October 1, 1915. The Secretary in his "announcement" forming the foreword to his latest revised statement frankly states that it was an error on his part to place this fund on the liability side of the general fund commencing with the statement of July 2, 1913.

In answer to any criticism which might be made as to dropping this liability for the purpose of increasing the balance of the general fund, it should be said that a footnote appears on the statement of October 1, 1915, stating that the outstanding national bank notes for which deposits have been made and which must be paid out of the general fund amount to $23,096,069.50. Anyone who so desires can, therefore, deduct the amount from the net balance in the fund.

On September 1, 1913, a change was made in the asset side of the statement by eliminating the expression "free and available balance in Treasury and banks." By this omission the silver bullion, subsidiary silver coin, fractional currency, and minor coin which were formerly among the assets as "balances in Treasury offices, limited tender or unavailable," were moved up as part of the cash "in Treasury offices." Inasmuch as it is clearly stated just what each item represents, we believe the change is fully justified.

FORM AND SUBSTANCE.

The change which has received the most comment in the revised statement of October 1, 1915, is the elimination from the liability side of the statement "balances to the credit of disbursing officers." On October 1, 1915, these balances aggregated $61,089,225.97. In the past it has always been the policy to treat these balances as disbursements, whether the money was actually paid out or not. We can not see how these funds in themselves differ largely from other money of the Government until actually paid out. We believe, therefore, the plan of treating them as part of the general fund balance is entirely justified, especially so when a notation appears opposite the net balance in the fund stating the exact amount to the credit of the disbursing officers.

In the new statement no liability for outstanding checks will appear, as the Secretary claims it is not practicable to get this information daily from disbursing officers. We, of course, are not familiar with the obstacles in the way of getting this information, but the figures are, of course, incorrect to the extent of these oustanding checks. Proper accounting practice requires that when checks are drawn they must be treated as a disbursement and deducted from the available cash balance. As an offset, however, to these outstanding checks the Secretary calls attention to cash receipts in transit to the Treasury. He also states that the monthly statement, which was formerly known as the public-debt statement, and which will be issued about the 15th of the month for the previous month, will show these outstanding checks.

On the whole, we fail to see the slightest evidence indicating a desire to deceive the public in the daily statements of the Treasury or to make the balances appear larger than they really are. It is our opinion, from an accounting standpoint, that the latest revised statement is a great improvement over the former statements. In order that the public may fully understand the new statement the Secretary had printed on the first page on its first appearance on October 1, 1915, a full and frank explanation regarding all important changes which have been made.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

[From the Commercial and Financial Chronicle, New York, Nov. 20, 1915.]

Newspaper columns have been filled this week with sensational reports bearing upon the condition of the United States Treasury. As these have emanated from political sources and obviously been circulated for political effect, they would ordinarily be entitled to no notice or consideration. It happens, however, that Government disbursements have been running in excess of receipts and that Government cash has, as a result, been contracting. It is also well known that administration circles are casting about for new forms of taxes with which to raise additional revenues. This makes it important to examine into the charges. As it happens, too, a basis for the allegations exists in certain changes that have been made in the form of the daily and monthly Treasury statements.

The author of the charges is ex-Senator Jonathan Bourne, jr., of Oregon, and he speaks as president of the Republican Publicity Association. The statement put out is quite a lengthy one, and though its purpose is palpably obvious, we reproduce it in another column, since the newspapers have featured it with all sorts of startling headlines, such as "Says McAdoo's United States millions are phantoms," "Assails McAdoo as a money juggler," "Finds Treasury balance padded more than $100,000,000," etc. The gist of the allegations is that under the present administration repeated changes have been made in the form of the Treasury statements, this part of the assertion being, as we have already indicated, correct. The latest change dates from October 1, and the principal point in it is that it has increased very materially the so-called available cash balance. Changes of that kind are always viewed with suspicion, even when sound or unobjectionable, and it is important, therefore, to inquire into this departure with the view to seeing whether it can be considered justified.

It is an unfortunate feature that in recent years nearly every new head of the Treasury Department has deemed it expedient to revise the debt and Treasury statements. Usually some improvement is effected as a result of the revision, though by no means invariably so, and often the amendments deal with very minor matters. Congress, on its part, has at times given directions as to how particular items should be treated. Altogether the effect, as far as the ordinary layman is concerned, has been distinctly confusing. The peculiar mischief in such charges as those made by ex-Senator Bourne is that most persons do not consider themselves competent to decide questions of bookkeeping and accounting, and yet are inclined to give credence to reports or intimations of irregularities, on the theory that if they were not at least in part true or did not rest on substantial foundations their authors would not dare to give publicity to them.

On the present occasion the Treasury figures and accounts have been entirely recast. Many innovations are introduced. Some of these are distinct improvements. In particular is this true regarding the tabulations dealing with the gold and silver holdings and the trust funds existing in connection therewith, to take care of the gold and silver certificates that are outstanding against large amounts of the holdings. Under the old form of return the "free" gold available for the general use of the Treasury could not be told except after considerable figuring, nor the balance of silver on hand. Now the accounts are so stated as to show the surplus gold and the available silver dollars with exact precision. That is an important point gained. On the other hand, in some other directions information previously furnished is materially curtailed.

The advantages referred to appeal, of course, to all those who are obliged to consult and study the Government figures for their own enlightenment or that of the public. The general reader is concerned mainly about the truth of the assertions that the Treasury balance has been padded as a consequence of the recasting of the accounts. It is true that the net balance in the general fund now stands very much larger than it did under the old arrangement of the figures. An idea of the extent of the change wrought in that particular is found in the fact that the Treasury statement for September 30 under the old form gave the net balance as $40,898,894, whereas the statement for the next day (October 1) gave the available balance under the new form as $128,063,545. Plainly, therefore, the effect of the change has been to add a very large sum to this balance.

It is due to Secretary McAdoo to say that the nature of the changes by which this new result was reached and the reasons for them were set out at considerable length and with indisputable clearness in an "announcement" which occupied a whole page in the Treasury statement for October 1. Mr. Bourne affects to believe that this explanation is obscure. The truth is, what has been done could hardly have been set out with greater clarity.

The increase in the available balance is due to two main alterations, both involving large sums, and we imagine opinions will differ as to the propriety of the changes. As to at least one of them, however, Mr. McAdoo has authority of law behind him. The two changes consist (1) in excluding from the liability side of the general fund the item of "disbursing officers' balances" and (2) in excluding also the amount deposited by national banks for the retirement of national bank notes, but not yet paid out for that purpose. This last amounted on September 30 to $34,340,866, and is the item as to which the Secretary has authority of law for his act. The item is in every sense a current liability, since the money has been deposited with the Government for the express purpose of retiring the notes and under accurate accounting methods it would be set aside in a specific fund to take care of the notes as they came in. The Secretary recognized the character of the item soon after his advent to office and, changing previous practice in that respect, he had the item marshalled among the current liabilities, thereby diminishing the amount of the available current balance. Experience has shown that the notes in process of retirement are very slow in coming in, and while of course this does not change the character of the liability, the fact remains that Congress had long previously directed by statutory enactment that such deposits should be treated not as a current liability, but as part of the public debt.

The Treasury Department really went outside the pale of the law when two years ago it began to enter the item in its true character as a current liability. The Secretary says frankly now that this was an error. The act of July 14, 1890, prescribes that such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts and that the notes thus rendered, subject to retirement by the United States, shall be carried as part of the public debt—that is, that the item shall be exhibited each month on the printed statement of the public debt under the heading "Debt of the United States bearing no interest." As directed by the act of July 14, 1890, the amount to the credit of this fund was mingled with the general cash and carried there continuously until the early part of the present administration, when the form of the Treasury statement was changed. The item has now been restored to the general fund in accordance with the requirement of the law. The change made in that particular, therefore, is good law, though not in consonance with sound accounting practice.

In the case, however, of the item of disbursing officers' balances, which is of much larger magnitude, it aggregating September 30 $60,409,181, the Secretary makes a departure entirely on his own responsibility. He points out that these disbursing officers' balances consist of amounts placed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of disbursing officers, against which they are authorized to draw checks in payment of public obligations. In the past, whenever the Secretary has placed an amount to the credit of a disbursing officer it has been the custom to carry that on the Treasury statement as a disbursement. The Secretary states that as a matter of fact the money in many instances is not spent for months, and sometimes not at all, being returned to the Secretary's account.

The argument is plausible enough, but nevertheless these balances have all the characteristics of a current liability. They represent disbursements not actually paid out but set aside for payment, and to a larger or smaller extent they are immediately drawn against. To just the extent this is done the balances no longer have any existence. The Secretary says it will be impossible to state outstanding checks in the column of liabilities in the daily statement because it is not practicable to get the information daily from disbursing officers. It is contemplated, however, to set up outstanding warrants, checks, and matured coupons as a liability in the monthly debt statement. Obviously, to the extent at least that warrants, checks, etc., are on any given day outstanding, they ought to appear as a liability. To report the available cash balance without deducting the same is an overstatement in just that amount.

Mr. McAdoo argues that the new daily statement is on a cash basis. Receipts, he states, under the old method were reported on a cash basis, while disbursements were on a mixed basis. This proved confusing. Under the new form, he contends, disbursements, like receipts, will represent cash transactions. But in ordinary business affairs, when a check is drawn in payment of a bill, or of a service rendered, it is counted as a disbursement and cash balance marked down accordingly. The money is no longer considered available, whether the check is presented immediately or not until two or three days later.

The Secretary argues that outstanding checks and warrants are offset in large measure by receipts which are in transit to the Treasury. That may be, but it does not alter the fact that such warrants and checks should be deducted, even if the full amount standing to the credit of disbursing officers is not eliminated. The results are in error by the aggregate amount of such outstanding items. Why it should be so difficult to get the records of checks and warrants is hard to understand, but the Secretary lays emphasis on the point and says that inasmuch as it will be necessary to get information from disbursing officers all over the country, the monthly statement, heretofore issued promptly on the first of the month, will be greatly delayed, though it is believed that this can be so expedited that the department will be able to issue the statement on the 15th of each month. The statement for the present month had not yet reached us up to late last night.

If the daily record of available cash balance is in error in the particular mentioned, there is this much to be said, that a footnote is added to each day's statement showing the amount of moneys held for retirement of national bank circulation, while the item of disbursing officers' balances is also stated. Accordingly, it is possible to calculate the balance on the old basis if so desired.

When all has been said that can be said, it remains true nevertheless that these repeated changes by one administration after another in the form and character of the debt and Treasury statements are disturbing and highly objectionable, if for no other reason that they render difficult comparisons with the past on an identical basis. The lesson which the experience teaches would seem to be that the character and contents of these statements ought to be prescribed by law so as to render it impossible for each new head of the Treasury Department to impose on the form of the statement his own ideas as to what it should be.

DAILY STATEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES TREASURY.
(Oct. 1, 1915.)

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The daily statement of the United States Treasury and the monthly public-debt statement of the Government have been revised by a committee appointed by order of Secretary McAdoo so as to make them more intelligible and clear to the public. The new daily statement will represent the actual condition of the Treasury, so far as it is possible to present it, at the close of business each day. The new public-debt statement will show the actual condition of the Treasury and the state of the public debt at the close of business each month. The new form for the daily Treasury statement becomes effective October 1, 1915, and that for the public-debt statement October 31, 1915.

The most important points in which the new form of daily statement differs from the old are the following:

The assets and liabilities of the Government have heretofore been published under two general classifications, viz: (1) The general fund, and (2) the currency trust funds, the general fund, and the gold reserve fund.

The new form shows the assets and liabilities divided into three classes, viz: (1) Gold, (2) silver dollars, and (3) the general fund. This gives at a glance the amount of gold and the amount of silver dollars in the Treasury, the liabilities against such coin and bullion, and the actual condition of the general fund.

In the new form the item "Disbursing officers' balances" is excluded from the liability side of the general fund and included in the net balance. These disbursing officers' balances consist of amounts placed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the credit of disbursing officers, against which they are authorized to draw checks in payment of public obligations. These amounts are funds of the United States in the same sense that the balance remaining, subject to the warrant of the Secretary alone, is money of the United States. In the past, whenever the Secretary has placed an amount to the credit of a disbursing officer, it has been the custom to carry that on the Treasury statement as a disbursement. As a matter of fact, the money in many instances is not spent for months, and sometimes not at all, being returned to the Secretary's account. Funds are placed to the credit of disbursing officers practically as a bookkeeping arrangement, and they are as much a part of the working balance of the Treasury as the money which is subject to the warrant of the Secretary. As the net balance should represent the funds in the Treasury available for paying the current obligations of the Government, the amount placed on the books to the credit of disbursing officers should be included therein.

The amount deposited by national banks for the retirement of national-bank notes but not yet paid out for that purpose is also included in the net balance. In the old statement this amount was carried on the liability side of the general fund. This was an error, because by law deposits for the retirement of national-bank notes are a part of the public debt. The act of July 14, 1890, prescribes that such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, and that the notes thus rendered subject to retirement by the United States shall be carried as a part of the public debt. This fund is not the 5 per cent fund provided for the redemption of the current circulation of national banks, but is a fund for the redemption of the notes of national banks which have ceased to circulate notes, or which have reduced their circulation. As directed by the act of July 14, 1890, the amount to the credit of this fund was placed in the general fund balance, where it was carried continuously until the early part of this administration (1913), when the form of daily Treasury statement was changed. The item is now restored to the general fund balance, where it belongs, and will appear as a liability on what was previously known as the monthly public debt statement.

Following the general fund statement appears the daily trial balance of the general fund, entitled "Receipts and disbursements this day." This is a simple statement of the day's transactions. One important change contained in this table, as well as in the "Comparative analysis of receipts and disbursements," on page 3, is the segregation of Panama Canal receipts.

In the past it has been customary to set forth Panama Canal disbursements separately as extraordinary expenditures, but receipts from tolls, profits from the sales of material on account of the canal, etc., have been included in the ordinary miscellaneous receipts. In future these Panama Canal receipts, like the disbursements on account of the Panama Canal, will appear separately.

The new daily statement is on a cash basis. Receipts have been reported on a cash basis, while disbursements have been on a mixed basis. This has proved confusing. Under the new form disbursements, like receipts, represent cash transactions.

It will be impossible to state outstanding checks in the column of liabilities in the daily statement, because it is not practicable to get the information daily from disbursing officers. Outstanding checks and warrants are offset in large measure, however, by receipts which are in transit to the Treasury. All outstanding warrants and checks will be shown monthly in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

Several tables that appeared on the fourth page of the old statement are either omitted entirely as unimportant or uninforming, or are included in the new items on page 4—"Federal reserve notes and national-bank notes outstanding" and "Transactions affecting Federal reserve and national bank-note circulation." "Bonds held in trust for national banks" still appears, but the table of "Pay warrants drawn" has been omitted. It is believed that a daily statement of these warrants is of no value, and it will hereafter appear in the form of "Pay warrants issued," monthly, in what previously was known as the public-debt statement.

The new statement will give an accurate idea of the actual condition of the Treasury as far as it is ascertainable from day to day. The old statement, with its cumbersome notations of purely bookkeeping transactions within the Treasury Department, which had little bearing upon actual expenditures, has been very confusing and has led to much misconception as to the actual condition of the Treasury.

The public-debt statement in the new form is changed to "Financial statement of the United States Government."

Instead of reproducing the daily statement for the last day of each month on the public-debt statement the new statement will include a table of cash available to pay maturing obligations, or, in other words, the working balance of the Treasury, with the liabilities against it. On the asset side of this table will be the net balance in the Treasury. On the liability side of this statement will be set up outstanding warrants, checks, and matured coupons. While it will not be practicable, as stated above, to get daily from disbursing officers a statement of their outstanding checks, it will be possible to get this information once a month.

The monthly statement will also include a table of warrants and checks issued by departments which will show the expenditures according to this classification.

It will be necessary to get information from disbursing officers all over the country for the monthly statement, but it is believed that this can be so expedited that the department will be able to issue the statement on the 15th of each month.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] asked some time ago for unanimous consent for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, for the last year and a half or two years I have tried to keep track of the workings of the United States Treasury and the operations of the tariff law which was passed during that time. It has been my custom every morning to receive this report. I received it on the 1st day of October, I had also received it the day before, on the 30th day of September, and I want to tell you the difference between the two, for I made a memorandum of it at the time. The balance on hand on September 30 was $40,898,898. The next day it was $128,063,545.23. I read the explanation of discrepancies referred to by the gentleman from Virginia. It was a plain, straightforward statement on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury, giving an explanation which I fully understood, or thought I did, except in regard to one item, and I think it was my fault that I did not understand that. Let me give you that item. On September 30 the deficiency for the year had aggregated $43,486,740.93 and the next day it had shrunk to $29,978,235.56. The whole situation was unfortunate. I do not charge to anybody, the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else, any intentional wrongdoing in this matter. I simply say that the statement as now issued and as it has been issued since the 1st of October is misleading—though I think unintentionally—to the American people, and that it ought not to have been done in the middle of an administration that has continued the old form of statement for nearly two years.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] fairly and squarely, as he always has acted for the last 20 years that I have known him in this House, states that in his judgment the present statement ought not to be as it is. I do not care what the law is; I care nothing about that. To tell me, even if the law was passed by a Republican administration, that the $26,000,000 of money to-day held in trust paid in by the banks of the United States for a specific purpose should be reported to the American people as available funds for the use of the Treasury is wrong. That the Treasury has a legal right to use it and carry the unpaid bank notes as a debt, I do not dispute. I do deny the morality of the transaction.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt my friend? Who is responsible for the wrong?

Mr. HILL. I do not care who is responsible.

Mr. GLASS. That is the very question that is under consideration.

Mr. HILL. I am not making any criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am making a criticism upon this statement. If it is wrong to-day it was wrong during the first 18 months of your administration, when it was reported differently, and it is unfair and unjust to the prior administration, for the balance reported on hand June 30, 1913, would have been very much larger than $165,960,984 if the method of reporting in use now had been employed then.

Mr. GLASS. I think it was wrong for 23 years.

Mr. HILL. And so do I. What is the result? I would not asperse anybody, and yet I could not help thinking of a story when I read this last October. There is an old story about building the Fourth Avenue Tunnel in New York, built by the Harlem Railroad, under the auspices of Commodore Vanderbilt.

A gentleman one day asked him on what terms he built this railroad, what the agreements with the city of New York were, and he said, "We built it with the understanding that the city of New York should pay half and the Harlem Railroad should pay half," and I will not use his exact language, but he said in reply, further, "I am extremely glad that the city of New York paid the half she did, for if she had paid the other half she would not have paid nearly as much." [Laughter.] I thought of that when I read this statement of October 1, and I have thought of it ever since. I say to you as a bank officer that such a statement as that made from day to day, whether in accordance with the law or in violation of the law, is wrong.

Let me give you the statement of December 15, received by me this morning and submit it to your individual judgment as to whether it is wrong or right. Net balance, $106,148,796.28. The average citizen of the United States would think that was the money the Treasury had on hand available for use. It is not. It is not within $105,000,000 of it. That is not right, whether the law justifies it or not. What would you deduct? The Secretary puts against it a side note that $52,814,000 of it is to the credit of the disbursing officers. That accounts for that much. Down in little fine print at the bottom is a footnote that $26,175,358 of it has been sent in by national banks to pay outstanding bank notes, and in the general column is subsidiary coin, nonlegal tender, fractional currency, nonlegal tender, minor coin, nonlegal tender, except in small amounts, silver bullion available for coinage, but nonlegal tender in its present form. But taking out of that $106,000,000, money that is already set aside for other purposes, and which can not be used except for those purposes—taking out of that $106,000,000 the trust funds paid in by the banks for a specific purpose, taking out of it the nonlegal tender money which would not naturally be used, there is still left in the Treasury this morning, instead of $106,000,000——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for five minutes more. I will not use it all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. There is plenty of time.

Mr. HILL. Instead of $106,000,000, taking out these items, which any man who ever kept a corner grocery store in the United States knows should not be included, there is but $1,148,267 which should represent in that statement the available funds in the Treasury.

Mr. GLASS. Will my friend let me interrupt him right there?

Mr. HILL. And I will join with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] if he will bring in a bill to compel by law a change in this form of statement, in order that the American people can tell where their money is and how much of it the Treasury has on hand with no prior claims against it.

Mr. GLASS. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. GLASS. The gentleman from Connecticut will admit that a trust fund of $32,000,000 was required by law to be stated precisely, as the Secretary of the Treasury in this changed form does state it?

Mr. HILL. I do not question it at all.

Mr. GLASS. Very well. Then as to the fund to the credit of disbursing officers, amounting, I believe, to approximately $62,000,000.

Mr. HILL. It was $52,000,000 this morning.

Mr. GLASS. It was $62,000,000 when it was transferred on October 1.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. As to that fund, will my friend read him what a certified accountant——

Mr. HILL. I have not the time for that. I think I have read it.

Mr. GLASS. So that so far from its being a system that would discredit a corner grocery——

Mr. HILL. You and I are to blame for it.
